WHITE HOUSE MEETING WITH SENATE LEADERS HELD TO SPEED BILLS

BURGOO KING DERBY WINNER BY 5 LENGTHS

Bradley Scores His Third Victory in Kentucky Turf Classic.

ECONOMIC IS SECOND AFTER SETTING PACE

Stepenfetchit Runs Third; 40,000 See Tick On, Favorite, Outrun.

By ALAN GOULD
(Associated Press Sports Editor).

Churchill Downs, Louisville, Ky., May 7 (A.P.).—The thoroughbred son of a royally bred sire, Burgo King, came down the stretch today with a smashing drive to capture the rich Kentucky Derby, duplicate the victory of his daddy, Bubbling Over in 1926, and give the hearts of the old Bluegrass their greatest thrill in many a Southern moon.

Burgoo King whipped the best that the East had to offer in an unwieldly field of twenty starters, whipped them all soundly and gave his owner, Col. Edward Riley Bradley, the master of Idle Hour Farm, of Lexington, honors that no turfman has ever gained before.

An unexpectedly big crowd of 40,000 roared its tribute to Col. Bradley's third victory within a dozen years, a record for all time. In addition to the conquest of Bubbling Over in 1926, the Bradley entry of Behave Yourself and Black Servant ran one-two in 1921. Baggenbaggage, another Bradley Horse, ran second to Bubbling Over.

Proves Derby Caliber.

Taking full command in the stretch after being rated nicely all the way by Jockey Eugene James, a former Louisville newsboy, Burgoo King left little doubt he was the best of the 3-year-olds in this fifty-eighth running of America's most colorful horse race.

The big chestnut son of Bubbling Over-Minawand finished five good lengths in front of his nearest Eastern rival, Economic, owned by J. H. Loucheim, of New York.

Economic, after setting the pace for the first mile and then being unequal to meeting Burgoo King's strong finish, saved the place by the margin of a head over Stepenfetchit, main hope of the stable of Mrs. John Hay Whitney, of New York, and ridden by the veteran Buddy Ensor.

A half length behind Stepenfetchit, noses separated the next three horses as Brandon Mint finished fourth, Over Time, the other Whitney entry with Earl Sande in the saddle, fifth, and the heavily-played favorite, Mrs. Louis G. Kaufmann's Tick On, sixth.

Tick On went to the barrier the popular choice at odds of 9 to 5, but used up most of its energy in bad behavior at the barrier. The black son of On Watch contributed mainly to the delay of exactly 15½ minutes at the post, finally broke poorly, was kicked in an early jam and never a contender despite the efforts of Jockey Pete Walls to pull the favorite out of the ruck. Tick On manifested plenty of gameness and speed in spite of misbehavior and bad breaks which effectually destroyed any real chance this colt had of giving the winner a race.

Brother Joe Last.

Burgoo King's stable mate, brother Joe, finished last after Liberty Limited, the hope of the Three D's Stable, of Fort Worth, Tex., broke down in the back stretch, but nobody paid any attention to that oddity as the handsome victor came back to the stands to receive a terrific ovation while Gov. Ruby Laffoon presented the trophy to Col. Bradley.

With the complete entry list of twenty going to the barrier, thereby upsetting expectations of a half dozen scratches, the derby was worth $62,875.

The winner's net earnings amounted to $52,350. Economic drew down

Police Club Woman In Scottsboro Protest

Cleveland, May 7 (A.P.).—One woman was clubbed about the head and several men were arrested as police stopped a meeting of the International Labor Defense Union today. Approximately 500 persons had gathered to protest the conviction of nine Scottsboro, Ala., Negro youths for attacking two women. A police riot squad was sent to the place when delegates to the twenty-ninth quadrennial conference of the African Methodist Episcopal Church across the street complained of the noise.

Patrolman James Patton, a Negro, clubbed Mrs. Mary Johnson when the crowd charged him, police said. The beating was termed a case of self-defense by Patton's superiors. Police dispersed the gathering after laying down a smoke screen. Placards demanding "justice for Scottsboro martyrs" were ripped down by officers.

Assassin of France's President Called Red

Inquiry Fails to Support Charge by Millerand; Elections Today.

Paris, May 7 (U.P.).—The body of President Paul Doumer, who was assassinated by a fanatical Russian, lay in solitary state in the Elysee Palace tonight, while a shocked nation mourned the murder of its venerable and beloved leader.

A wave of intense nationalism swept the country at the sacrifice of its 75-year-old patriot to the twisted political theories of Paul Gorgouloff, an exiled Russian, who shot the president twice as he attended an afternoon charity affair yesterday.

A mild sensation was caused when Alexander Millerand, former president, was quoted in the newspaper L'Intransigeant as saying:

"I have received private information enabling me to affirm categorically that the assassin of President Doumer belonged to the regular Bolshevist forces."

Nothing in the investigation tended to bear out such an assertion. Inquiry into his activities here, in Prague and on the Riviera showed Gorgouloff to have been trying to organize a shadowy association of

FALL'S PRISON TERM MAY END TOMORROW

Court Order Sent by Air Mail Cuts Month From Time of Former Official.

Santa Fe, N. Mex., May 7 (A.P.).—Albert B. Fall, former Secretary of the Interior, is expected to be released from the State Penitentiary here Monday upon receipt by Warden Ed Swope of a court order air mailed from Washington today.

The 70-year-old convict No. 6991 completes tomorrow his Federal sentence of a year and a day assessed on his conviction of accepting a $100,000 bribe from E. L. Doheny, oil magnate, for leasing naval oil reserves during the Harding administration.

Officials in Washington today overcame an obstacle that threatened to keep Fall in prison another month, at least, when they obtained from the District of Columbia Supreme Court an amendment to his commitment papers.

Warden Swope had held steadfastly to his determination to keep the former Cabinet member a prisoner until a fine of $100,000 had been satisfied. The commitment papers specifically stated he was to remain in prison until the fine was paid.

With the time off for good behavior, Fall served his sentence in ten months. By serving 30 days more and taking a pauper's oath, he could have wiped out the fine, which now stands as a judgment against him and may be collected by the Government when, and if, he gets the money.

When the commitment was amended in Washington today, Warden Swope said he had no statement to make, but indicated he would honor the court document. It was understood he would ignore any telegraphic order, but would wait for a certified copy which has been dispatched from Washington.

Mrs. Fall, who has been conducting a restaurant at Ela Paso, Tex., and other members of the family, are in Sante Fe awaiting the freeing of the elderly and enfeebled prisoner.

Mrs. Ruth Simms Denies Senate Plans for Mate

Albuquerque, N. Mex., May 7 (A.P.). Mrs. Albert Gallatin Simms said here today rumors from Washington regarding her plans to put her new husband forward as a candidate for the Senate from New Mexico in 1934 were "utterly without foundation." and "carried no element of truth."

OUTSIDE GROUP TOLD TO LOOSEN GAS GRIP

P. U. C. in Surprise Move Against Interests Controlling Company.

A strategic move to call the hand of the owners of the Washington Gas Light Co. and to transfer to them the burden of proof was taken shortly before noon yesterday when the Public Utilities Commission issued an order demanding that they surrender the 84 per cent of the capital stock of the local gas concern which they hold in violation of the La Follette antimerger act.

The action came as a distinct surprise to the gas company and the Chase National Bank, of New York, which heads the numerous holding companies and interlocking directorates linked with the local organization. It was taken at the last minute possible before the annual stockholders' meeting of the Washington Gas Light Co., scheduled for tomorrow morning, so as to prevent any further stock juggling either before or at the meeting.

The several corporations named as the owners of the gas company are expressly forbidden from voting their stock at this meeting. These owners are specified as the Chase, Harris, Forbes Corporation, of New York; the Public Utility Holding Corporation of America, and the Central Public Service Co., of Chicago, and their various subsidiaries and affiliates.

Listing these and others, the commission's order states that they "are hereby directed forthwith, absolutely and unconditionally to divest themselves and each of them of the con-

New York Mail Fraud Case Jury Dismissed

New York, May 7 (A.P.).—The jury which heard the case of Charles V. Bob and Frederick C. Russell, indicted for mail fraud and conspiracy, was dismissed today by Federal Judge John M. Woolsey. The jury, which had deliberated 48 hours, stood four for acquittal, six for conviction on all counts and two for conviction on some counts.

A former trial, which lasted seven weeks, ended in a jury disagreement on November 18 with the jury seven to four for conviction on the final ballot. John S. Pratt, special assistant to the Attorney General, advised Judge Woolsey the Government would try the case again.

2 Capital Motorists Jailed In Chase as Car Hits House

Machine Leaves Road in Fort Myer Heights and Continues After Crash Until Policeman's Bullets Disable Tank and Tire.

Two Washington men were being held on investigation charges in the Arlington County Jail last night after a car in which they were riding crashed into a house in Fort Myer Heights, Va., backed away into a trolly station and then was halted only after a policeman had disabled a tire and the gas tank with pistol fire.

The men are L. C. Carter, 49, purported driver of the machine, and Curtis Carter, 29, brothers, both of 109 Ridge road southeast. Police said they lost control of their speeding machine at the base of the hill on Sherman avenue in Fort Myer Heights. They went down a slight incline 75 feet from where they crashed into the house of John Cave, frightening the occupants and tearing a sizeable hole in the house.

Backing away, the Washington men's machine crashed into the electric trolley station, though inflicting little damage. The men then sped away toward Clarendon—bricks from the Cave residence dropping intermittently on the road—where at Wilson boulevard and Clarendon avenue Arlington County Policeman A. D. Langley leaped on the running board.

Langley said the elder Carter pushed him from the moving machine, and the policeman then said he drew his pistol and fired three times, disabling a rear tire and puncturing the gas tank. He commandeered a passing car and gave chase, halting the fleeing machine six blocks away. The men then were taken to jail.

$100,000 GIVEN MEANS SOUGHT IN BANKS HERE

U. S. WANTS TO FIND IF HE WORKED ALONE

Former Justice Department Agent Is Preparing to Obtain Release.

(Associated Press.)

The elusive trail of the $100,000 paid Gaston B. Means to bring about the return of the kidnaped Lindbergh baby yesterday led Department of Justice agents to safety deposit boxes in the Nation's Capital as a part of a far-flung investigation.

Working quietly but intensively, the Federal agents also attempted to untangle the many other ramifications of the melodramatic case, including whether the former Department of Justice investigator had any associates in his alleged attempt to defraud Mrs. Edward B. McLean of the money.

The wife of the publisher of The Washington Post has charged she gave Means the money on his representation that he could recover the child. When she became convinced her plan was fruitless, she reported to Department of Justice officials that Means refused to return the money.

Means Arranges for Bail.

Meanwhile, the portly former convict made plans for his release from the District of Columbia jail on $100,000 bond if the grand jury indicts him next Tuesday for larceny after trust. He has arranged for bail with a professional bondsman.

A possible hitch in his arrangements was indicated, however, by a statement from Leo A. Rover, United States district attorney, who has his own ideas about freeing Means.

Rover told newspapermen he would not be concerned if the prisoner were released—"provided he makes the right kind of bond."

"That means four bondsmen," he added, "each responsible individually for the whole amount."

Under this arrangement, a $400,000 guarantee would be required before he could turn his back on his present abode.

His bond was fixed at $100,000 by Needham Turnage, United States commissioner, at a preliminary hearing last Thursday a few hours after his arrest.

Prisoner Not Worried.

Means, wearing a heavy blue suit and felt hat, is confined in a cell with John Kendrick, charged with assault with intent to kill. He is spending his time reading newspapers and talking with other prisoners.

"He seems to be taking it all right," said Col. William L. Peak, the

Smith Delegates Hold Large Lead

Massachusetts Vote Gave Him 95,000 Majority Over Roosevelt.

Boston, May 7 (A.P.).—Delegates at large pledged to support the presidential candidacy of Alfred E. Smith in the Democratic national convention next month defeated candidates pledged to Franklin D. Roosevelt in the Massachusetts primary, April 26, by majorities ranging from 91,179 to 97,014, official figures announced today showed.

Senator David I. Walsh, heading the Smith ticket, received the largest vote, 153,465, in the official returns. Although unofficial returns had placed James A. Roosevelt, son of the candidate, at the head of the Roosevelt-pledged ticket, the official returns showed Mayor James M. Curley received the largest vote in that group, 55,479.

The official returns of the Republican vote, where there was no contest, showed a total of 57,534 for former Gov. Alvan T. Fuller, who led the four candidates for delegates at large.

Menacing Notes Spread Terror in Illinois Area

Taylorville, Ill., May 7 (A.P.).—State highway police and county authorities tonight were guarding several recipients of intimidating letters and endeavoring to run down the senders.

Although the reported targets of extortionist demands denied receiving the notes, officials said threatening letters had come to a number of residents of Taylorville and nearby towns demanding large sums of money and spreading a virtual reign of terror over the county.

SMITH ATTACK HELD BLOW TO ROOSEVELT

President Is Given Even Chance to Win; Wet Plank Declared Certain.

By EDWARD T. FOLLIARD.

A lot can happen between now and election day in November, and no doubt a lot will happen. However, it can be reported that, as of today, the Republicans are more hopeful—or, less scared—than they have been in a long time.

Two developments are responsible for this rise in Republican hopes:

First, the feud in the Democratic party, which threatens to end up either in the nomination of a weakened Roosevelt, or the nomination of somebody else who will lack the appeal that Roosevelt seemed to have before Al Smith bruised him.

Second, the popular acclaim that has been accorded President Hoover's scorching attack on Congress—an attack, which in Republican eyes, was aimed principally at the Democratic-controlled House of Representatives.

Tokens of Change Cited.

Depending on the past to guide them, the political analysts have been citing three things as token of a change in Government this year.

To begin with, they say that point has been reached in the political cycle where it is time for the Republicans to get out and make way for the Democrats.

Then, they point out, consider what has happened to other Presidents following severe depressions.

Finally, they invite your attention to an almost infallible sign of defeat for the party in power—loss of the House of Representatives midway in the term of a President.

These signs are, of course, apparent to the Republicans. And yet, as has been said, their hopes have started to rise.

Smith Dealt Roosevelt Blow.

Last Wednesday, following Franklin D. Roosevelt's defeat in the California primary, a Republican senator, one who will play an important part in the forthcoming campaign, talked frankly about the situation.

"Six months ago," he said, "it looked like Roosevelt would be the nominee, and it looked like he would sweep the country. Politically, he seemed to have everything—a good name, a good record, and a reputation as a vote getter.

"They tell you that we were hoping that Roosevelt would be the nominee; that we felt he was weak. That is pure bunk. We were scared stiff. That is, we were scared then.

"But that is not so now. Al Smith

Utah's Delegation Named for Hoover

Four More Members to Be Selected Later; Smoot Heads Group.

Ogden, Utah, May 7 (A.P.).—Seven delegates at large, headed by Senator Reed Smoot, were elected by the Republican State convention today, and instructed to vote for renomination of President Hoover. Four more delegates, bringing Utah's representation at the national Republican convention to 11, were to be chosen later in conventions of the State's two congressional districts.

In the face of pleas for harmony by his opponents, Ernest Bamberger, of Salt Lake City, former national committeeman, was elected to that position over A. B. Irvine, former president of the State Senate.

Mr. Bamberger was twice the Republican nominee for the United States Senate against Senator William H. King, and succeeds Harold P. Fabian resigned. Mrs. Jeanette A. Morrell, of Ogden, was reelected national committeewoman.

France Reduces Quota Of Imported Wheat

Paris, May 7 (A.P.).—The amount of foreign wheat French millers may use in the mixing of their flour has been reduced from 45 per cent to 40 per cent by official decree.

France previously had lightened her restrictions on the importation of foreign wheat by revising upward the proportion permitted to be used in French flour from an allowance of only 3 per cent early this year. The new decree places the quota back where it was April 1, when it was increased from 40 per cent to 45 per cent.

McKellar Fund Slash Plan Delayed Again

Chairman of Senate Appropriations Committee Decides to Ignore Rule in Marking Independent Offices Supply Bill.

A new obstacle appeared in the path of the McKellar plan to slash all appropriations 10 per cent when Senate Appropriations Chairman Wesley L. Jones yesterday decided not to apply the rule in marking the independent offices supply bill, next of the appropriations measures on the Senate calendar.

Senator Jones will decide this week when he will go ahead with consideration of the omnibus savings rider to the legislative appropriations bill.

Possibility of his committee writing the President's enforced Federal furlough plan into the omnibus rider, instead of the 11 per cent salary cut, with $2,500 exemption, voted by the House, was admitted by Appropriation Chairman Jones.

He predicted the George bill, giving the President almost unlimited authority to reorganize the Government, would be substituted for the House reorganization provision. The House bill allows congressional veto of any steps taken by the President, under a rule requiring a 60-day lay-over at the Capitol.

The President suggested in his message that from $130,000,000 to $150,000,000 more in economies could be written into the bill. He complained the reorganization authority given him by the House was so restricted as to block possibility of substantial savings through realignment of bureaus.

A motion by Senator Tasker L. Oddie (Republican), Nevada, to rescind 10 per cent cuts ordered in the Postoffice-Treasury bill, is pending before the Senate, with other resolutions to modify application of the McKellar knife to that measure.

Tomorrow morning a subcommittee will begin marking the independent offices bill. While some reductions may be made, Senator Jones said it

Mills Announces Means of Cooperation Sought by President.

BIPARTISAN EFFORT ON HILL IS WANTED

Senate Finance Committee's Tax Compromise Cited as Sample Task.

(Copyright, 1932, by the Associated Press.)

President Hoover and Secretary Mills at a special conference with Republican senatorial leaders last night discussed further "methods of cooperation to bring about prompt enactment of the revenue bill and economy legislation."

The words are those of the Secretary of the Treasury, who was delegated spokesman as the group broke up after an hour and a half discussion embracing the legislative situation.

Those who sat down with Mr. Hoover and Mr. Mills in the Lincoln study were Vice President Curtis, and Senators Watson, of Indiana, the majority leader; Smoot, of Utah; Reed, of Pennsylvania; Bingham, of Connecticut; Dickinson, of Iowa—along with Walter H. Newton, the presidential secretary who deals especially with Capitol Hill.

Politics Out of Discussion.

One after another of the conferees declared on leaving the White House that political matters had not entered into the deliberations.

Secretary Mills, questioned as to the course of the cooperative endeavor, said it would lead "eventually" to bipartisan cooperation toward the ends sought. He refrained from saying whether any specific conclusions had been reached.

Secretary Mills cited the abrupt adoption of a compromise tax bill by the Senate finance committee Friday as the type of cooperation set as the goal.

Asked whether the rPesident was pleased with that bill, he returned, jovially, "Well, I haven't lost my job yet."

It was practically a bill recommended by Mr. Mills at an executive session that the finance committee approved without ado after days of work on the House tax bill in which it reversed itself repeatedly.

Mills Expects Early Action.

Mills seemed to expect the bill to be reported to the Senate in a very short time.

The Treasury chief also expressed approval of the manner the House ways and means committee last week turned thumbs down on legislation to cash the veterans' bonus.

"That's a real committee," he said. "It always was."

When in the House from New York, Mr. Mills served on that committee.

While declining to give details of any program that may have been agreed upon, Mills hinted that the administration expects the Senate to do much more in the way of slashing the Federal outlays in the course of revamping the emasculated economy bill passed by the House.

He referred questioners to the Hoover message to Congress of Thursday and the amount mentioned therein as the goal wanted.

Hoover Analyzes Results.

In that message the President declared:

"In the category of further economies which can only be made by changes in laws which would give authority to the Executive and the appropriations committees, many items were proposed by executive officers of the Government, and some portion of them were embodied in the bill presented by the special economy committee to the House of Representatives.

BUS TERMINAL FIRM BUYING HOTEL HERE

Negotiations Under Way for Purchase of Annapolis; Will House Depot.

The next owner of the Annapolis Hotel, eleven-story concrete and steel structure at 1111 H street northwest, will be the Washington Bus Terminal Co., as soon as negotiations now being conducted by the real estate firm of McKeever & Goss, Inc., are concluded, it was announced yesterday.

The building will be purchased from the Washington Annapolis Hotel Co., of which Hilleary G. Hoskinson, a vice president of Riggs National Bank, is president. The consideration will not be made public, it was stated. The current assessed valuation of the property is $1,454,488.

Representatives of the company acquiring the hotel said yesterday that extensive improvements will be made on the building and that part of the ground floor will be transformed into a downtown bus terminal for a number of prominent lines operating through the city, the identity of which they are not yet ready to disclose.

Plans for the ground floor terminal provide space for the loading or un-

G. O. P. in Washington Downs Repeal Efforts

Seattle, Wash., May 7 (A.P.).—Defeating attempts to insert a prohibition repeal plank in the State platform, the Republican State convention here today adopted a party program that calls for "strict enforcement of all laws."

The prohibition amendment was not mentioned. A request of John J. O'Brien, of Seattle, that a clause calling for submission of the prohibition question to State conventions be added to the program was voted down, 474 to 446.

HOUSE UNIT VOTES TO SHELVE BONUS

Issue Dead, Says Ways and Means Head; Patman to Renew Fight.

(Associated Press.)

Determined supporters of the cash bonus plan yesterday began a movement for a summer session to keep the proposal from the legislative death arranged by its opponents.

"The bonus issue is dead this session," Representative Rainey, Democratic leader, told newspapermen yesterday after he filed a report which dug a grave for the $2,000,000 payment to veterans. Signed by thirteen members of the ways and means committee, it recommended that the Patman bill for a $2,400,000,000 new money issue to redeem veterans' certificates "do not pass."

That made it virtually certain that the bonus will not be taken up at this session if Congress quits before the conventions, but bonus sponsors replied: Henceforth the slogan will be: A vote to adjourn is a vote against the bonus."

In voting against the bonus yesterday members of the ways and means committee reaffirmed an adverse ballot of fifteen to ten of Friday, thereby taking the most drastic parliamentary course for strangling the legislation.

Only one faint hope remained for a House vote before the national political conventions in June—a deci-

Mrs. Massie Is Missing; Subpena Servers Balked

Writ Demanding Her Presence at Retrial of Hawaiians in Attack Case Is Returned After Hunt; Friends Say She Plans to Sail Today.

Honolulu, May 7 (A.P.).—Mrs. Thalia Massie, who is reported suffering from a nervous breakdown, was sought unsuccessfully today by police who held a subpena demanding her presence May 25 at the retrial of four Hawaiians charged with assaulting her.

Mrs. Massie had planned to sail tomorrow for the mainland with her husband, Lieut. Thomas H. Massie, who, with her mother, Mrs. Granville Fortescue, and two enlisted men, was convicted of manslaughter for the slaying of Joseph Kahahawai, one of her alleged attackers.

The failure of the police attempt to locate Mrs. Massie left her contemplated departure in doubt.

Two policemen, Dewey Mookini and Arthur Stagbar, took the subpena to Pearl Harbor after the public prosecutor, John C. Kelley, had been assured naval authorities would permit its service. The navy yard is a Government reservation.

But they never saw the woman they sought, although they returned to the city with the assurance of naval authorities that they would be notified as soon as Mrs. Massie could be found.

Admiral Stirling instructed Capt. F. J. Horne, his chief of staff, to conduct a search and advised the process servers they would be notified of the result.

Since all the Massie-Fortescue party had planned to sail tomorrow on the liner Malolo, friends of the

LOCAL ISSUES HEAD WEST VIRGINIA DRIVE

Chief Interest in Tuesday Primary Is Race for Governorship.

Charleston, W. Va., May 7 (A.P.).—The West Virginia primary campaign, drawing to a close, has been confined almost exclusively to State issues.

National politics has remained in the background throughout the campaign which has been centered largely around contests for the nomination for governor. The primary will be held May 10.

Both the Republican and Democratic parties will elect delegates to the national conventions, and Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt of New York and Gov. William H. (Alfalfa Bill) Murray of Oklahoma have entered the primary for the Democratic presidential preference vote. Former Senator Joseph I. France, of Maryland, is the lone entry for the Republican presidential preference vote.

Hoover Is Favored.

Most of the Democratic delegate candidates are pledged to Gov. Roosevelt and the Republican delegate candidates are generally regarded as favoring the nomination of President Hoover. The result of the preference vote is not binding upon delegates.

Voters will need good pencils when they mark their ballots, for they will face a big job. In addition to nominating party candidates for governor, they also will nominate six other elective State officials, six members of Congress, fifteen State senators, which constitute half the membership of the State Senate, and all the 94 members of the House of Delegates of the State Legislature. Party political committees also will be selected. The largest number of candidates, however, may be found in the various counties where county and district officials will be nominated.

11,500 Candidates in Field.

Approximately 11,500 candidates are seeking office throughout the State, of whom about 11,000 are after county or district offices. In Kanawha County, the largest of the 55 counties, there are 460 Democratic candidates for county and district offices and 413 Republican candidates for the same offices.

Interest in the primary produced a heavy registration of 925,000 voters, or approximately half the State's population. The Republicans registered 470,478 voters, the Democrats 448,981, and the remainder were scattered. The Democratic registration cut the Republican majority of 82,000 in 1930 to 21,000 this year.

Baggage Theft Case On Alexandria Docket

The May term of the Corporation Court of Alexandria will convene tomorrow, with Judge William P. Woolls presiding.

The case of B. E. Squires, indicted for grand larceny, will be disposed of tomorrow. Squires is charged with the larceny of the baggage of persons whom he had engaged passage with by automobile to the Pacific Coast. It is alleged that on arrival at Alexandria the passengers went to hotels for the night, and Squires decamped with their baggage. He was arrested in Oklahoma.

Debt Cancellation Urged to Cure Ills

Roanoke College President Would Also Lower Tariff Walls.

Roanoke, Va., May 7 (A.P.).—Cancellation of war debts and the lowering of tariff walls were advocated as remedies for the present depression by Dr. Charles J. Smith, president of Roanoke College, in a paper presented today before the closing session of the sixth annual meeting of the Virginia Social Science Association.

Other speakers were Dr. H. R. McIlwaine, State librarian, and Dr. J. P. McConnell, president of Radford State Teachers College.

Conflict between nations over debts and reparations he described as "the masterpiece of bankrupt statesmanship," adding: "Our leaders cringe before public opinion, to which they owe their leadership. To believe that this crisis, which has brought so much misery and woe to all peoples of the earth, is just another swing of the normal business pendulum, and that it will soon right itself, if we addle along with it, is the counsel of ignorance."

sion by the powerful rules committee giving the rejected bills a special legislative status. Representative Patman (Democrat), Texas, said he would appeal to this committee, but Rainey predicted confidently that "the rules committee isn't going to approve it."

Patman said the fight would continue with "renewed enthusiasm" and added:

"It would not surprise me if the President changed his mind and indorsed the bill within the next 30 or 60 days. Purchasing power must reach the masses of the people some way."

Rainey's report was signed by the ten Republican committee members.

Chairman Collier and Representatives Crisp (Democrat), Georgia; Ragon (Democrat), Arkansas, and Lewis (Democrat), Maryland, who voted with the majority, will file special views, while a number of minority reports also are expected.

"The proposition seriously presented," the report said, "is that we start the printing presses to working and print additional money. * * * At the present time we have outstanding currency to the amount of $5,400,000,000. This would amount to an immediate inflation in our currency of almost 45 per cent. * * *"

Rainey said the impression seemed to prevail that Congress, in creating the $2,000,000,000 Reconstruction Finance Corporation, "has authorized the donation to the banks and railroads of this enormous sum of money."

"We have appropriated $500,000,000," the report continued. "The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is not making any donations. It is loaning money for the purpose of saving from destruction solvent banks and solvent railroads. * * *

"Patriotic citizens throughout the country and newspapers ought to correct the erroneous impressions which are going out with reference to the operation of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. * * *"

Gross, Elusive Diplomat, Is Declared Out of Service

Georgetown Resident's Career Closes After Disputes With Wife, Daughter of Late Francis Burton Harrison; Vanishes as Suit Goes Against Him.

The diplomatic career of Christian Canning Gross, dapper secretary of embassy and Georgetown resident, ended abruptly yesterday when the State Department curtly announced he had "separated" from the service on May 5, 1932. Officials of the department declined to comment on the strange formula employed in the case of Gross, but it is believed that this action was decided on after the series of litigations involving the American diplomat and his wife, the former Virginia Harrison, daughter of the one-time Governor General of the Philippines.

The Grosses were divorced in Paris, where he had been stationed as second secretary for two years from 1924. Following the divorce, however, more litigation was begun because of the $1,000,000 trust fund established by Francis Burton Harrison in favor of his daughter, and of which Gross was the trustee.

Gross began suit in the Chicago Supreme Court to determine whether he was the father of the youngest child, Anna. At the time of his divorce from Mrs. Gross he testified he had not known of the existence of the child.

The legal proceedings in Chicago brought out that Mrs. Gross had been arrested in Paris on charges of immorality some time before Gross had taken steps to bring about the divorce. With her at the time of the arrest was Marius de Zayas, a Mexican artist.

After leaving Paris, Gross had been stationed at some of the choicest diplomatic posts in the department: Berne, Havana and finally Ottawa, the latter post in February, 1931. Here he proceeded to take the house of Maj. William Duncan Herridge, Canadian minister here now. Gross was a popular member of the younger set of the Canadian capital and was a frequent visitor to the fashionable hunt clubs and manors in the dominion.

At the time of the Chicago suit, however, he mysteriously disappeared. The State Department was in a quandary as this was the first time any American diplomat had so suddenly dropped from sight.

The Chicago court, after deliberation, decided that Gross was the father of the child, Anna, and ordered that the birth certificate he had produced in court be destroyed. In the general confusion after the decision, Gross stepped unobtrusively out the side door and has not been found since.

T. H. Fisher, Mrs. Gross' attorney, had been waiting for the conclusion of the trial to serve a summons on Gross for contempt of court in New York. The New York action had been taken by Mrs. Gross following litigation there between them. The lawyer of Mrs. Gross also had papers to serve on Gross to begin actions of $100,000 each against him, the plaintiffs being Mrs. Gross, her New York attorney, Arthur Garfield Hays and Marius de Zayas.

Some time last autumn, Gross rented a house in Georgetown and has been at various times reported here. However, the first action in his case by the Department of State was taken only last Thursday.

There have been other instances where attaches of the department have been dropped for various offenses, but this is only the second time in the memory of veterans in the American foreign service that such a formula has been employed. The other instance which was recalled yesterday was in the case of a consul, Maurice C. Pierce, formerly at St. John's, New Brunswick.

Gross had had an excellent record in the service and had advanced rapidly. During the war he was a captain in the A. E. F. and after he had taken some courses at the French Universities of Grenoble and Algiers. He entered the State Department on December 13, 1923, and was appointed some months later to Paris.

Earl of Albemarle's Picture To Be Unveiled in County

Special to The Washington Post.

Charlottesville, Va., May 7.—Mr. and Mrs. Murray Boocock, of Castalia, near Keswick, this county, have issued invitations to the unveiling of a portrait of William Anne Keppel, second Earl of Albermarle, after whom Albemarle County was named. The ceremony will take place at the Boocock home at noon on Wednesday, May 18, and will be followed by a breakfast.

The act establishing the county of Albemarle was passed by the Legislature in September, 1744. In accordance with a custom already begun of commemorating the governors of the Commonwealth, the name of Albemarle was given to the new county from the title of William Anne Keppel, governor general of the colony from 1737 to 1754.

The organization took place on the fourth Thursday of February, 1745, on the plantation of Mrs. Scott, near Scottsville, where the next court was directed to be held. The whole population of the county in 1745 was 4,250. The present population is 26,981.

Soldiers from Albemarle fought in all of the important battlefields of the Revolution—Long Bridge, Trenton, Stony Point, Brandywine, Germantown, Saratoga, Monmouth, Savannah, Charleston, Camden, King's Mountain, Cowpens, Guilford, Eutaw and Yorktown.

The most striking event connecting the county with the Revolution was the location within its bounds of the camp for the convention troops—the prisoners captured in October, 1777, at Burgoyne's surrender. These troops were first sent to Boston, where they were to be allowed to return to Europe on their parole not to serve again till exchanged; but Congress refused to ratify the terms of the convention, and the next year directed the prisoners to be removed to Charlottesville. They reached their new quarters about the first of the year, 1779, and remained until October, 1780. The camp was situated on the north bank of Ivy Creek.

QUICK RENO DIVORCE GIVEN ANN HARDING

Harry Bannister and Blonde Star Are Affectionate at Unique Separation.

Reno, Nev., May 7 (U.P.).—Ann Harding, blonde screen star, and Harry Bannister, her actor husband, whose name blazed in electric lights when she was an unknown stock company actress, went into court here today and removed from Bannister the ignominy of being known as "Mr. Ann Harding."

It was a divorce unique in Reno's records of unusual decrees.

Bannister arrived at the courthouse first. Miss Harding, dressed in black except for an expensive silver fox fur, joined him. Then as he patted her back encouragingly, they walked down the aisle to Judge Thomas Moran's dais.

A brief legal mumbo-jumbo and the divorce was granted. Bannister and his former wife embraced, kissed and promised mutual "dear friendship."

Arm in arm they walked out of the courtroom to Bannister's rented automobile. They, their attorneys and a few friends entered and with Miss Harding snuggled close to Bannister's shoulder, they drove to the Heidelberg roadhouse, where they held a "divorce party."

From the roadhouse they drove to the airport, where he handed her into an airplane and waved good-by as the plane took off for Hollywood.

The court session, but 10 minutes long, was closed to the public and newspapermen. Details of her cruelty charges on which she obtained the decree, were not disclosed, but under Nevada law they could be very vague.

'Locust Swarm of Lobbyists' At Capitol Is One of Largest

Representatives of Special Industries and Causes Clutter Corridors; Influence Held Negligible; Some "Sell" Vote Without Approaching Member.

(Associated Press.)

The "locust swarm of lobbyists" on Capitol Hill, so-called Friday by President Hoover, is actually one of the largest in recent history.

Taxes and tariffs always attract these representatives of special industries. It's sure-fire evidence of the fact that no one wants his taxes raised, no one wants to have appropriations affecting him cut and every business is interested on one or the other side of such legislation.

The room where the Senate finance committee has been working to raise enough money to balance the budget has been the particular attraction of late. Lobbyists have cluttered the corridors there, lolling and pacing, and swarming about the doors of members.

The President said the fiscal issue was in part one "between the people and the locust swarm of lobbyists who haunt the halls of Congress, seeking special privileges for special groups and sections of the country, misleading members as to the real views of the people by showers of propaganda."

How fruitful are their quests can not be accurately gauged; but the legislators consider the influence of the average lobbyist negligible. In fact, the temper of the weary senators and representatives just now seems such that a lobbyist's appeal is apt to have the opposite of its intended effect.

But business has convinced itself it must have these agents around. Perhaps the agents also have convinced business they have influence. Anyway, they are crowding Capitol Hill.

The "big boys" who are fairly wise at the game seldom hang around the corridors buttonholing members. Their approach is far more subtle, if no more effective.

It is not business alone that is represented by lobbyists. Many organizations have their agents at work. Two rival women's organizations are seemingly constantly at war at the Capitol. They come by groups and droves to press their causes.

The lobbyist is supposed to go to the general reception room in the Senate and send in his card for a member with whom he desires to speak.

But the drove following the tax bill has kept no bounds. The Senate finance committee met for the last two weeks in the military affairs committee room just off the Senate floor so that members could go in for roll calls without losing too much time.

The small corridor leading from the committee room to the Senate floor was jammed constantly with newspapermen, representing the public, and lobbyists, representing special interests.

Members have had to elbow their way through the mob. Occasionally, the lobbyists would surround one, but for the most part they would just wait to pick up the news the newspapermen got. The lobbyist usually tries to work more privately with a member.

Senator Reed (Republican), Pennsylvania, one of the chief foes of the lobby group, has pointed out that some lobbyists "sell" the votes of members although they have never even approached them.

He said there is evidence of a "racket" whereby certain lobbyists find out how a member is going to vote on a proposition. The lobbyist, Mr. Reed says, then goes out and for so much money claims he can get that vote.

But not all lobbyists are bad—very few, in fact. Fewer are the members of Congress influenced by their appeals. Even the irate opponents of the lobbyists concede they have a proper right to present the views of their industry. If they would just stop with a presentation of that view the complaint would not be so intense.

HOOVER'S REBUKE AND FEUD OF DEMOCRATS G. O. P. HOPE

has done what I don't think we could have done. Had we denounced Roosevelt, people would have said, 'Oh, the same old partisan attacks.' But when Al Smith, his political godfather, starts calling him names, then they stick.

Will Adopt Wet Plank.

"I don't know whether they are going to nominate Roosevelt or not. If they do, I believe Hoover will have better than a 50-50 chance to whip him. I am convinced he would whip him in the East—that is, assuming we adopt a wet plank, which we will."

Aside from Roosevelt, what Democrat do the Republicans think would make the most formidable candidate? A poll of some dozen Republican senators last week showed that there was far from any unanimity on this question. In most cases, the senator looked at the matter from a sectional rather than a national standpoint. A Western senator, for example, would think of the various Democratic possibilities in terms of their appeal to the farmers, while an Easterner would consider their attitude on prohibition and business.

Baker or Davis Favored.

A cross section, however, showed that the Republicans felt that the two strongest men among the Democratic possibilities were Newton D. Baker and John W. Davis.

In the row between President Hoover and Congress over an immediate balancing of the budget, the President, for the time being, has much the better of it.

The President says that the matter is not a "partisan" one, but that is not the view taken in Congress.

"It was an appeal to the gallery," shouted that fiery little Democrat, Huddleston, of Alabama, yesterday. "It was misrepresentation to advance his own political fortunes."

Republican politicians feel that the President has greatly strengthened himself in the estimation of the public.

As these politicians view the future, Herbert Hoover will be the issue in the campaign. They believe that two emotional factors will figure in the campaign in connection with Hoover.

Republicans to Capitalize Fear.

One of these emotional factors will be resentment, the other fear. As they see it, it is a question of which emotion will triumph. Will the voters, angered by the economic slump that has accompanied Hoover's term in office, express their resentment by voting for a Democrat? Or will they, in fear of what might happen by a change to the Democrats, vote to continue Hoover in office?

The Republican strategy, of course, is to capitalize on the fear element; to convince the voters that it would be dangerous to "change horses crossing the stream."

The House of Representatives has done much to help along this strategy. Republicans as well as Democrats have deserted their leaders, but it will be the Democrats who will be blamed. They are in control.

HOOVER AND SENATE CHIEFS DISCUSS SPEEDING OF BILLS

definite savings were covered in the bill which finally passed the House. Many of the indeterminate and indirect savings in the legislation can not be realized until late in the new year or after that.

"Many of the recommendations which were rejected by the House of Representatives should again be considered.

"Aside from the economy proposals affecting employes which are here included in the above discussion of the supply bills, there are opportunities to increase the direct savings provided for in the House economy bill from $30,000,000 to from $130,000,000 to $150,000,000, plus many indeterminate items which would result in further economies.

No Democrats Present.

"These savings would be over and above the amounts of savings referred to in the direct appropriations. Without going into the merits or demerits of the proposals, they do represent the correction of abuses and the curtailment of unnecessary functions of the Government and embrace items that can be dispensed with during the present critical period."

The conference, while not impromptu, apparently was called without those who were to participated knowing the subject. The first to arrive was Senator Smoot, the Vice President following him. Next came Senator Rood, saying he had no idea what the purpose was, and asking who had preceded him.

It was noted that no Democrats participated, but Mr. Mills was emphatic in asserting that only a general discussion of "methods" for cooperation had taken place and the means was to be nonpartisan.

"Our job now is to balance the budget," he reiterated. "It must be done along nonpartisan lines."

Massages Praise President.

Washington speculated last night on the next step the President is going to take in his campaign for quick action on Capitol Hill. Hundreds of messages of congratulation for his special message to Congress and his public statementof Friday continued to pour in, obviously to his encouragement.

But it is uncertain he will continue this line of attack. One of his closest advisors during the course of repeated conferences has expressed the opinion that statement-making can be overdone. But it is evident that there will be no hesitancy to follow either that procedure or any other to get the sort of action considered necessary.

It is known that Mr. Hoover has at least one other statement of his position in the mill.

Last night's conference, similar to one after another that he held during the winter, is not the last. In fact, others are expected before long.

Perhaps Next World Holds Cat's Reward

Blackie was a good cat.

And to circumvent any lapses in his instructive goodness, he wore two bells to serve a warning of a possible change of heart to all birds and squirrels.

But Blackie is dead. He died in agony from poison on the lawn of his owner's home in Chevy Chase, Md.

He had eaten a lethal potion prepared for him by some one who disapproved of his arrogant stride or his magnificence, for he was huge.

Blackie, whose formal name was "Manhattan," was the pet of Mr. and Mrs. Albert E. James, of 6800 Meadow Lane. They and many neighbors miss Blackie.

MINISTERS RENEW PLEA FOR COAL QUIZ

Senate Inquiry Is Urged by New Yorkers After Kentucky Survey.

New York, May 7 (A.P.).—A renewed plea for a senatorial investigation of conditions in the southeastern Kentucky coal region was made today by four clergymen as they returned from a survey of the mining area.

They made the trip representing a committee of 21 pastors who recently made a formal request for an official investigation.

The four who toured Kentucky said they were convinced that if the Costigan-Cutting resolution for a senatorial inquiry were passed, a big step would be taken in "restoring civil rights and preventing the abuse of official power."

A full report of interviews obtained with county and municipal officials, clergymen, leading citizens, coal operators, miners and labor leaders will be made to the full committee at a meeting next Friday.

Ministers Making Tour.

The group that visited Bell County, Kentucky, comprised Rankin Barnes, executive secretary of the Department of Christian Social Service of the Protestant Episcopal Church; Reinhold Niebuhr, professor of the Union Theoligical Seminary; Cameron Hall, pastor of the Christ Presbyterian Church, and William B. Spoffard, editor of the Witness, an Episcopal weekly.

"We are convinced there have been widespread violations of civil liberties and that no adequate steps have been taken to bring the perpetrators thereof to justice," the group reported.

"By their own admission county officials withheld all rights from any one who engages in 'red' activities; and, according to testimony of a considerable number of citizens we interviewed, no sharp distinction is made in the definition of subversive opinions and activities.

Admissions of Officials.

"Public officials, on their own admission, have made little if any effort to apprehend those guilty of acts of violence against the Waldo Frank group and the Arkansas students (who went to Kentucky to investigate conditions)."

The group added the miners appear to be convinced efforts to organize them in a struggle for better conditions, and any show of sympathy for their cause, will prompt further violence.

Louisville, Ky., May 7 (A.P.).—Church, State and labor representatives received with silence today the declaration of four Eastern clergymen their visit to southeastern Kentucky coal fields had confirmed their belief a senatorial investigation should be made of conditions there.

SPECIAL NOTICES.
TO POISONERS OF PETS.
It is inconceivable that any one masking as a human being could be so low as to poison another's pet, causing it to die in agony, but, unfortunately, proof exists that this is so.
Having no conscience or sensibilities decent enough to make them turn from this cruelty, and no sense of fair play or desire to use open and aboveboard methods for a crime which could be punished if detected, this sort of sneak can get away with such an action in an underhanded manner, thereby preventing the owners from getting rid of their pet in a humane way, which any fair-minded person would be glad to do if given an opportunity and convinced that it was in any way obnoxious.
Entirely apart from the shock and suffering caused the owners of the pet, who can at least express their suffering and get help, one would naturally look for enough compassion in human nature to refrain from inflicting pain upon a defenseless creature who can only trust its so-called superiors for the kindness, good will and affection it shows them.
To deny at least the privilege of relieving its agony and hasten its death mercifully is, indeed, unbelievable.
To this brand of person one can only quote the words of a famous humanitarian and lover of life in all its forms, who had had this sad evidence that the society of animals was preferable to that of some human beings: "I never have heard of this breed of pet poisoners getting a dose of their own poison, but I still have hope."

KIDNAPERS FREE SON OF RICH JOLIET MAN

Family Denies Any Part of $50,000 Ransom Was Paid to Gang.

Joliet, Ill., May 7 (U.P.).—Kidnapers today freed Gustave Miller, 22, son of a wealthy malt dealer, after carrying on negotiations with the family for a week in the face of efforts by other gangsters to "muscle in" on ransom. The family denied making any payments.

The youth, abducted a week ago Thursday, was turned out of an automobile near the gates of Starved Rock State Park, 65 miles southwest of Joliet, and told to walk down the road without looking back.

He did as instructed and walked into the arms of members of his family, who had been instructed to meet him through contacts made in Chicago gang haunts.

Miller had not been harmed and told of being given all he wanted to drink and eat in a hideout located four and one-half hours driving distance from Joliet.

The negotiations for his release were complicated by efforts of Detroit gangsters and others to obtain sums of money ranging from $35,000 to $50,000 on representation of ability to effect the youth's return.

The right train was found by Martin Miller, attorney and brother of the kidnaped boy, when he went to Chicago to hangouts of the "42" gang and obtained a note giving directions for obtaining Gustave's return.

Alexander Jamie, chief investigator of Chicago's "Secret Six," said he knew the identity of four members of the kidnaping gang. He characterized them as "small-time kidnapers," and declared the Miller family had paid ransom, but that it was less than $3,000.

MINNESOTA U. FACES DEEP KIDNAP PUZZLE

Student Is Seriously-Ill After 3-Day Disappearance; School Censured.

Minneapolis, May 7 (A.P.).—Police and University of Minnesota officials, who two days ago viewed the disappearance of a student leader as a page out of light comedy, decided today they had a serious mystery on their hands after his return with a story of being kidnaped.

Richard Morean, the student, was in bed unable to answer questions, with his father describing him as a "nervous wreck" from his experience. He disappeared Wednesday and returned Friday night saying he had been seized by four men, his eyes bandaged, that he had been anestheticised, and held captive in a Wisconsin Lake cottage on a bread, water and sausage diet.

His grandfather, F. P. Nicoll, offered a reward of $500 for apprehension of his abductors and spurred police in an effort to unravel the mystery. Nicoll also charged university authorities with laxity in discipline and asserted a student political faction "is at the bottom of the whole affair."

Morean, after a bitter ballot fight, was selected leader of the senior prom, regarded as a high honor.

He was released according to his story in time to attend the prom last night, but when he arrived at the hotel where it was held, unshaven, and in wrinkled clothing, his father and two detectives hustled him home. The prom went on, without a grand march, until 5 a. m. today.

Nicoll, in an open letter, demanded the resignation of E. E. Nicholson, dean of student affairs, "for the good of the institution," and criticized him for letting "student politics get out of hand together with discipline."

Morean said four men in a large sedan followed his car Wednesday night, forced him to the curb, and then compelled him to enter their machine. From the Wisconsin cabin, he related, he was taken Friday at 6 p. m. and released along the highway. He made his way to a farm house, telephoned his father, and drove to St. Paul with a garage man.

He said he had no idea as to the identity of his abductors or their purpose in holding him.

GEN. CROWDER DIES AFTER LONG ILLNESS

Rites for Veteran in Army Service and Diplomatto Be Tomorrow.

Maj. Gen. Enoch Herbert Crowder, scholar, soldier and diplomat died yesterday at the Walter Reed Hospital after a long illness and an attack of pneumonia suffered while on a visit to Cuba.

The first American Ambassador to Cuba, Gen. Crowder formulated and supervised the selective draft during the World War, and for twelve years served as the judge advocate general in the Army.

Secretary of War Hurley and Newton D. Baker, former Secretary of War, expressed their sorrow at the death of Gen. Crowder, and praised him for his service to the country. Colleagues in the Army mourned his passing as a leader and a man

He was 73 years old, and his long service in the military and diplomatic corp had underminded his health. He was taken seriously ill while visiting Cuba, and was removed to Walter Reed Hospital on a stretcher. For some time it had been apparent that he could no recover.

Having received his Doctor of Law degree after study in the leading universities of the country, he developed his legal talent along military lines and was considered one of the outstanding legal experts of the Army. His career as judge advocate general in the Army was a prelude to his outstanding service in organizing the draft of over 2,000,000 men during the World War.

Ambassador to Cuba.

Resigning from Army service, he was appointed Ambassador to Cuba in 1923, but was forced to discontinue his diplomatic service in 1927 due to ill health.

The former judge advocate was unmarried. He is survived by two sisters, Miss Nell Crowder, of Los Angeles, who was with him when he died, and Mrs. Albert T. Duvall, of Louisville, Ky.

Funeral services will be held at the Walter Reed Memorial Chapel at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning. The chaplain of the hospital, R. Earl Boyd, will officiate. Full military honors, will be accorded him at the burial at Arlington Cemetery at 11:15 a. m.

He was graduated from the United States Military Academy in 1881, and attended the University of Missouri where he received a bachelor of law degree. He studied for his doctor of law degree in Harvard University, Columbia University, Brown, Princeton and other universities.

Entering the Army June 11, 1881, as a second lieutenant, he was appointed major judge advocate in January 11, 1895. He served in the capacity of judge advocate until June 30, 1901, when he was honorably discharged from voluntary service. He reentered tht service in 1923 and continued until retirement in 1923.

While in the army he commanded a troop in the Geronimo and Sitting Bull campaigns, and served in the Philippine Islands, in Manchuria, and in Cuba. He was awarded the distinguished service medal, during the World Warfi and was decorated by the French, British, Italian, Japanese and Cuban governments.

Praise by Hurley.

Secretary Hurley said of him:

"None could have served his country more honorably or more efficently."

Newton D. Baker, when informed of Gen. Crowder's death, said that his career had been "one of the most eminent contributions the American Army has made to the people of the United States." Gen. Crowder and Baker had been closely associated in the service during the World War.

Speaking for the Army, Gen. Douglas MacArthur, chief of staff, said: "As the Army mourns his passing it can reflect with pride on the enduring luster which he cast for long years on the military service."

Gen. Crowder was a member of the Beta Theta Pi Fraternity and the following clubs: Army and Navy, India House, Union League, New York University, Midday, Glenview Country, Chicago.

Grief at Crowder's Death Is Expressed at Havana

Havana, May 7 (A.P.).—Members of the United States Embassy staff today expressed their sorrow at the death of Maj. Gen. Enoch H. Crowder, the former Ambassador to Cuba.

jail superintendent. "He doesn't seem worried. He has a good appetite."

An ineffectual search was made Friday of his home at Chevy Chase, just outside of Washington, but no trace of the money was found. It is understood similar investigations are to be made at Concord, N. C.; Aiken, S. C., and El Paso, Tex., where Means is supposed to have visited.

Officials expressed interest in word from El Paso that Means stopped at a hotel there in which a man resembling Harry Fleischer, fugitive member of the Detroit "purple gang" was seen. There was no indication, however, as to whether they considered it of any significance.

Agent Visits Concord.

Concord, N. C., May 7 (A.P.).—Police here today said that so far as they knew there has been no search here for the $100,000 which Mrs. Edward B. McLean, of Washington, gave Gaston Means to use in securing the return of the Lindbergh baby.

Means visited Concord, his birthplace, about two weeks ago. Two brothers, D. W. and Afton Means, and two sisters, the Misses Kate and Belle Means, reside here.

Police said, however, that a Department of Justice agent was here yesterday and they understood he visited the commercial telegraph offices here, presumably to check their files.

The Department of Justice agent was quoted as telling police he would not search the homes of Gaston Means' relatives here.

1932 SEASON OPENS AT GLEN ECHO PARK

Summer Amusement Resort Thronged by Crowds on First Day.

With a large crowd in attendance, Glen Echo Park, popular playground of Washington and nearby Maryland and Virginia, opened yesterday for the summer season.

Leonard B. Schloss, for twenty years manager of the park, was on duty greeting the visitors. Both children and adults swarmed the old mill with its elaborate scenery, tumbling falls and cool caverns. The swirling whip, the roller coaster and the midway, with its 57 varieties of fun, all met with renewed activity.

Conduit road, leading to the park, was filled with motorists in festive mood and the cars of the Washington Railway & Electric Co. rolled along the banks of the Potomac, well filled.

Dusk brought the appearance of many lights. In the ballroom, McWilliams and his enlarged orchestra were acclaimed by a large crowd and from the first strains of dance music to the goodnight waltz, the expanse of floor space was occupied by couples.

Thousands more are expected to visit the park today and tonight. Admission to the resort is free.

Citizens Will Join Fight on Cemetery

Montgomery Officials to Combat Injunction Plea Wednesday.

Hearing of the suit in which Fulton R. Gordon, Washington real estate dealer, seeks to enjoin the Montgomery County Commissioners from interfering with his establishment of a cemetery at Bradley boulevard and River road will be held Wednesday morning in Montgomery County Circuit Court, Rockville, Md.

The suit has aroused the organized citizenry of the Bradley boulevard, one of the most beautiful sections of the county and the center of the country club district. They seek to halt the establishment of the cemetery, which they claim will ruin the entire section. The cemetery site is across from the Congressional Country Club and officials and members of the club are especially active in fighting the scheme.

Mr. Gordon is represented by Attorneys J. F. Lillard, of Hyattsville, and Ogle Marbury, of Baltimore. The county commissioners will be defended by Cissel & Woodward, of Rockville. Groups of citizens have signified their intention of appearing in court to oppose the injunction.

loading of fourteen buses under cover at one time and their completion will result in one of the largest terminals of its kind in the country. The proximity of the terminal to the hotel lobby will be most convenient for passengers.

The hotel, which contains 400 rooms, and is 112 by 201 feet in dimensions, was built in 1924 by Wardman Construction Co., original owner, the architects being Wardman & Waggaman. The original estimated cost of the building was $1,750,000. Its subsequent owners have been Thomas P. Bones and James D. Hobbs, Fred H. Van Vranken Harry Wardman and Thomas P. Colorado Mine Wage Scale Cut Plea Denied

Denver, May 7 (A.P.).—Holding there was no justification for a proposed reduction in wage scales, the Colorado Industrial Commission today denied the petition of Northern Colorado coal mine operators for permission to cut the basic daily wage of miners from $6.72 to $5.

The operators claimed the reduction was necessary in self-protection and the miners countered with the statement that the present wage scale is not adequate for a decent living. The commission recommended creation of a miners organization for collective bargaining.

OLD AGE SECURITIES BILL IS DEALT BLOW

District Commissioners Say Local Finances Are Too Unsettled Now.

The District Commissioners yesterday reported adversely on the bill "to provide old-age securities for persons over 60 years of age residing in the District" on the ground that the added expense would be too great "at the present time, when the financial condition of the District of Columbia is so unsettled."

The measure proposes to establish an old-age pension, "which, when added to the income of the applicant (if any) will make a total income of not to exceed $9 a week." The applicant must have been a resident of the District for not less than ten years.

Declaring that the census indicates there are 15,541 persons in the District 70 years of age and over, the Commissioners estimate that about 1,800 would be eligible applicants for the pension. They add: "It is believed on conservative figures an annual average per capita charge for such persons would be $275 a year," bringing the annual cost of such legislation to about $500,000.

The report further calls attention to the existence of the District Home for the Aged and Infirm, of which the present enrollment is 551. "No application of any indigent person to receive aid at the home has been refused," they add. It would be necessary to continue operations of this institution if the legislation were enacted, the report states.

POSSE RENEWS HUNT TODAY FOR HURT BOY

Allan Gruver Is Believed to Be Mentally Deranged by Fatal Car Accident.

Searchers for Allan Gruver, 19-year-old son of Mrs. Elizabeth Gruver, of Hyattsville, Md., who was killed in an automobile accident Thursday morning on the Little River pike several miles west of Fairfax, Va., abandoned their hunt temporarily last night after 60 hours continuous searching.

Allan was the driver of the car in which his mother was killed and left the scene of the accident a short time later in an apparently dazed condition, according to witnesses. He was also badly cut about his head. The authorities believe he may have lost his mind from the shock or a blow on the head.

The youth wandered into the dense woods nearby and has only been seen once since, when he returned to the scene the afternoon of the accident and ran back into the woods at the approach of an automobile.

A posse of more than 50 firemen from McLean, Vienna and Fairfax has scoured the woods, but found no trace of the youth. They were joined yesterday by friends of the boy's family from Hyattsville and vicinity.

The hunt will be continued this morning when it is planned that about 100 persons from Maryland will join with a posse from Virginia to scour the woods again within a radius of 15 miles of the scene where the boy was last seen. Merchants and residents of the country for many miles have been warned to be on the lookout for the boy, as it is believed that if he is still alive he will approach some one for food.

COUNTY CIVIC GROUP TO MEET TOMORROW

Present Water Charges and Teachers' Pay to Be Upheld in Montgomery.

Montgomery County Bureau of The Post,
8103 Conn. Ave., North Chevy Chase, Md.
Telephone Wisconsin 4205.

Reports that the price charged for water in Montgomery County is not excessive, urging that the school teachers' salary schedules be maintained and that the present excellence of school standards in the county be not impaired, recommending certain features of a school plan and touching on deposits of county funds in local banks will be presented to the Montgomery County Civic Federation tomorrow night at its meeting in the Bethesda School.

Following a survey, the committee on public finance and budget will report that in view of the fixed costs for preparing the water and that approximately 25 per cent of the water consumed is provided without cost to fire departments, municipalities, institutions and other agencies as authorized by law as well as requiring a large amount for purification endeavors, "the charges for water to residents of Montgomery County appear to be fair and reasonable, when all of the factors involved are taken fairly into consideration." The report further states that the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission purifies water in its own plants cheaper than it can purchase the water from Washington when distribution costs are considered and that the rates would have to be raised if Washington water was depended upon exclusively.

Stephen James is chairman of the finance and budget committee.

Asserting that "the Montgomery Civic Federation and citizens of the county are proud of the school system which ranks first in Maryland," the school committee will report that it is "convinced that the most important consideration in our school affairs at this time is to maintain the standard of instruction and policy that has put our county school system first in the State. This can be done by continuing to furnish the number and kind of teachers needed, by payment of fair salaries, by maintaining the present supervisory and administrative services, by maintaining the special departments and branches of work and by continuing the normal development in the course of study in the light of the best educational advices."

The committee urges that the teachers' salary schedule be maintained if possible, but that if the county income makes savings necessary, temporary waiving of the schedule rather than cuts in salary should be resorted to. Several measures of economy are suggested, among which is consolidation of three small schools. The committee approves the principle of consolidation as a policy and urges that it should be further extended as conditions permit.

The committee, of which Robert E. Bondy is chairman, also presents a detailed report on general school conditions.

Permission to deposit Federal or State bonds and securities as security for county fund deposits as well as surety bonds is urged in another resolution which will be presented.

The membership committee will present a plan for widening the scope of membership of the federation so as to include more rural section organizations and make the federation actually county rather than more or less restricted to the metropolitan area. W. I. Cleveland, of Kensington, is chairman of this committee.

Gypsy Smith, jr., will hold evengelistic services each night this week except Saturday at 8 o'clock in the Rockville High School gymnasium. The opening service tonight will be preceded by a song service directed by Charles F. Allen, the Gospel singer. A rehearsal of the big chorus choir will be held this afternoon at 3 o'clock.

The board of directors of the Battery Park Association will meet tomorrow night at the clubhouse to consider the budget which will be presented at the meeting of the association Tuesday night in the clubhouse.

Annapolis, Md., May 7. — Nearly 2,000 horse lovers turned out today for the initial exhibition under the recently organized Southern Maryland Horse Breeders Association, held at Holly Beach Farm, the plant of Sylvester W. Labrot, well known breeder and owner of race horses, 5 miles north of Annapolis.

Classes judged included ponies ridden by children, saddle and jumping horses, and the program also included several flat races. Among the winners in the women's classes were Mrs. Hart, wife of Rear Admiral Thomas C. Hart, superintendent of the Naval Academy, and her three daughters, the Misses Isabell Hart and Carlyn B. and Marriett Hart, the latter two twins. The prize awards in the several classes included saddles and other riding equipment, in addition to ribbons.

James Cole, of Washington, who rode Chestnut Hill, owned by W. O. Faust, of Anne Arundel County, was thrown by his mount, but escaped injury. Most of the exhibitors were Anne Arundel horse owners. The new association has been formed to revive interest in horses generally, improve the quality of breeding and widen the market for home-bred equines. It plans to hold shows probably twice a year.

The route of the parade will be from Fairfax and King streets direct to the memorial, a distance of about 1 mile. The different organizations will be assigned places for assembling.

RARE WASHINGTON PAINTING IS SHOWN

By CHARLES ARTHUR HOPPIN.

In the Old Gallery of the National Museum, Smithsonian Institution, there is now on loan exhibition a curious and interesting painting of high authentic value to the student of American history. It is the work of Edward Savage, and represents Gen. George Washington reviewing troops at Fort Cumberland, Md., October 16, 1794.

The work is, of course, considerably more than a century old. For several decades it was sequestered in private ownership, lost to public inspection. It came into the possession of W. Lanier Washington, Westport, Conn., from the estate of the late Charles Quincy, of Boston, in 1927.

George Washington in his diary, under date of October 16, 1794, states that at 10 o'clock on the morning of that day he arrived at Cumberland and, finding the army drawn up to receive him, passed along the line of men and gave them formal greeting.

Companions Identified.

The Philadelphia newspapers of the time mentioned the incident. At the review Washington was accompanied, so the diary says, by Col. Alexander Hamilton, Maj. Gen. George Lewis, Bartholomew Dandridge, Gen. Henry Lee, Adjt. Gen. Hand and others. Brig. Gen. Samuel Smith was in command of the troops.

In the painting several of the officers are wearing the insignia of the Society of the Cincinnati.

The central figure of the three horsemen first behind Washington in the picture has been identified by Jonce I. McGurk, of New York, as Gen. Henry Knox. Maj. Gen. Daniel Morgan and Maj. David Lynn are also named in Washington's diary as present at the fort.

The review is supposed to have been the last occasion on which Washington formally appeared in military attire. He performed the duty of the moment as President and as commander in chief. He had made the trip to Cumberland from Philadelphia to appoint Gen. Lee to the command of the Army and to dispatch the troops to western Pennsylvania to suppress the whisky insurrection.

Portrait Significance.

The principal value of the painting lies in its portrait significance rather than in its esthetic qualities. Savage was not a great painter. His drawing is inferior and his style somewhat allegorical. He was not present at the review in person. He painted the work at and for his museum and picture gallery at Philadelphia, and it was intended for public exhibition purposes. His museum later was removed to New York, then to Boston.

Savage painted Washington three times. The first portrait was a commission from Josiah Quincy, then president of Harvard College; the picture is still in the possession of the university.

The artist was born at Princeton, Mass., in 1761. He studied under Benjamin West in London. Returning to America, he issued a number of steel and copper engravings of his paintings. His subjects included Gen. Knox, Gen. Wayne and other celebrities. He died at Princeton in 1817.

M'NEMAR EXPLAINS AMBIGUITY ON VOTE

Asserts Persons Previously Qualified Can Take Part in Roads Balloting.

ARLINGTON COUNTY
BUREAU OF THE POST,
Tel. Clar. 509. Clarendon, Va.

The taxpayers of Arlington County who failed to pay their poll tax yesterday, or before, are out of luck in so far as voting in the August Democratic primary or the national election in November, declared L. C. McNemar, former president of the Arlington County Civic Federation, yesterday.

"But such is not the case when it comes to voting in the special election, to be held on the same day as the Democratic primary, to determine whether we shall surrender to the Virginia State highway commissioner all of our jurisdiction and rights over our county roads," Mr. McNemar said.

"The law under which this special road election will be held provides that any voter qualified to vote at the latest general election of county officers in such county, and any since qualified in such county, at least 30 days prior to the special election held hereunder, shall be qualified to vote on the question herein provided.

Doubt Raised by Language.

"While this language is not free from ambiguity and leaves considerable doubt as to just what it does mean in at least one important particular, what it purports to say is that any voter in Arlington County who was qualified to vote in the county election held last November is qualified to vote in this special election, although such voter may have failed to pay his poll tax for the last year and therefore is ineligible to vote in the Democratic primary to be held on the same day.

"The language in the new road law also appears to state that any voter in Arlington County who paid his poll tax today, or before that date, and is therefore qualified to vote in the August Democratic primary or the national election to be held in November, also is qualified to vote in the special election. This, however, does not apply to all the voters who may qualify by becoming of age within 30 days prior to the national election, but only to those who became of age after the time to be assessed for poll tax last year and at least 30 days before the date of holding this special election.

Applies to Former Minors.

"The same applies to those residents of the county who have become citizens of the State of Virginia since the time to be assessed for poll tax last year, and within 30 days prior to the special election.

"There is another peculiar thing about this road law. If a voter is in favor of the law he must vote "No," but if he is opposed to the law he must vote "Yes" if he desires to vote his wishes in the matter. It is certainly unfortunate that our representatives in the General Assembly should consider it one of their chief indoor sports while the General Assembly is in session every two years and sometimes even while in special session, to see how many obstacles they can put in the way of the average citizen and taxpayer of this State either qualifying for or voting on any given proposition, either at a special or a general election," he concluded.

Determined to curb the daily increase of begging from house to house in all sections of Arlington County by persons seeking aid in money or food, the county board, in session at the courthouse yesterday, passed an ordinance drafted by Commonwealth's Attorney Lawrence W. Douglas, which requires the obtaining a permit from the superintendent of public welfare and countersigned by the county manager.

Appearing before the board, Mrs. Mae E. Jacobs, superintendent of public welfare, informed the board that only this week men representing themselves as members of Volunteers of America defied the county police to arrest them.

The ordinance also provides that it shall not in any way interfere with religious, educational or civic organizations in the county from seeking contributions for the benefit of their respective organizations.

Bent on trying to further protect the public from the traveling shows and carnivals, which Sheriff Howard B. Fields declares, take large amounts of money out of the county and leave very little to the merchant, the board adopted an ordinance which requires all traveling shows to obtain a permit 30 days before coming into the county at a fee of $300 to operate for a period of three days.

The board awarded contract for construction of a storm sewer in Ballston, a distance of 3,500 feet, to B. P. Short, of Hopewell, Va. The accepted bid was $4,780.67. Work is to be completed within 55 days from the signing of the contract. The specifications call for concrete pipe of 15 and 18 inches.

County Manager Roy S. Braden was authorized to ask for bids for the furnishing of fifteen uniforms and 30 shirts for the members of the county police force and to award the contract to the lowest responsible bidder.

M'KELLAR PAY CUT PLAN MEETS DELAY

is his intention to "test out the Senate" again on the McKellar proposal.

Protests that as many as 75,000 Federal workers may be thrown out of work if the arbitrary cut is made in every bill, followed Senate approval of the Interior and State, Justice, Commerce and Labor supplies, all sliced below House figures.

The latter bill goes to conference with the House Tuesday morning, when Representative William B. Oliver's House subcommittee is expected to accept the total cuts made by the Senate, asking only a few changes in items written into the bill by the Senate.

"If the conferees should decide to recommend any increases in the total amount, the matter will first be brought back to the House for approval," Chairman Oliver said.

P. U. C. TELLS CHICAGO GROUP TO SURRENDER GAS CONTROL

trol and ownership of all shares of the Washington Gas Light Co. * * * and to cease and desist from exercising any and all elements of control and/ or management" of "the company.

The utilities body finds as a fact that these organizations and the Washington and suburban companies "directly or indirectly acquired, holds, controls and votes 109,176 shares of the Washington Gas Light Co." The total number of capital shares of the company is 130,000 with a par value of $20 each.

Prolonged Battle Expected.

A lively and probably a prolonged legal battle is expected to follow in the courts as the result of the commission's action. If the owners of the gas company appeal from the order to the District Supreme Court, the burden of disproving the charges of the commission will be on them. If they attempt to evade the order, they will be prosecuted both for violation of the order and of the La Follette antimerger act.

Until yesterday the impression had been prevalent that the Utilities Commission would file a suit charging violation of the antimerger law, and consequently would be forced to prove its contentions in court.

The order, which was served on George A. G. Wood, president of the gas company, shortly after noon yesterday, covers 27 mimeographed pages and is supplemented by a huge chart illustrating the interlocking connections of the various holding companies with the Washington Gas Light Co. and even with the Alexandria Gas Light Co., the Rosslyn Gas Light Co., and the Montgomery County subsidiary. At the top of the diagram is the Chase National Bank, while the Central Public Service Co. is in about the center.

Dummy Trustees Alleged.

After establishing the authority of the commission for such action, the order reviews the evidence gathered at the public hearing last fall and prior thereto by William A. Roberts, special assistant counsel, and the Department of Justice. It then describes the alleged juggling of securities, the use of dummy trustees, and other reputed fraudulent practices of the gas company's owners since they acquired control.

Reviewing this purchase, the commission states that early in 1929 Albert E. Peirce, president of the Central Public Service Corporation, was approached by G. Bowie Chipman and Paul D. Keller, Washington promoters, with the suggestion that he acquire the stock of the Washington Gas Light Co.

Although he was "informed of certain laws * * * prohibiting the acquisition of the said stock," Mr. Peirce "nevertheless proceeded toward such acquisition by indirect methods for the express purpose of evading the said law," the order reads.

Purchase of Suburban Firms.

Among other charges made by the commission are that the trustees of the Washington and Suburban Companies, admitted owner of the local gas company and "successor in name to the Seaboard Investment Trust," are trustees in name only * * * are not informed as to the affairs of the trust and are removed at the will of the Chase, Harris, Forbes Corporation at the instigation of and at the request of the Central Public Service Co.; "that the Washington and Suburban Companies is entirely financed by the Chase, Harris, Forbes Corporation" * * * "that the Central Public Service Corporation, together with Chase, Harris, Forbes Corporation, caused the election of George A. G. Wood as president of the Washington Gas Light Co. without consultation with the alleged trustees of the Washington and Suburban Companies;" and that the Central Public Service Corporation "controlled and managed the actual operations" of the local gas company "without the consent of the trustees of the Washington and Suburban Company.

The commission explains the purchase of the Alexandria and Hyattsville gas systems by Mr. Wood as an agent for the Central Public Service Corporation, together with the posting of 20,000 shares of the Washington Gas Light Co. in the Riggs National Bank as security for a loan of $1,000,000 to the Alexandria company.

Management, Contract.

Concerning the organization of the Washington and Suburban companies, the order states:

The notes and preferred stock of the organization "requires $810,000 per annum in fixed charges, and the income of the Washington & Suburban Companies in dividends from all of its holdings does not exceed $450,000, of which $392,371.20 represent dividends received from the Washington Gas Light Co. at the rate prevailing during the years 1929 to 1931, inclusive. There is no revenue available to the Washington & Suburban Companies for payment on its common shares and there is no revenue available to the Westfield Trust for payment of interest on its outstanding obligations."

How the Central Public Service Corporation required the local gas company "to apply to the Utility Engineering Corporation, a subsidiary of Central Public Service, for a management contract at an annual retainer in addition to the actual cost of such services of $12,000 a year" is also related. This contract was withdrawn, however, later at the demand of the commission.

Rate Reduction Blocked.

The commission asserts that "a rate reduction agreeable to the officers of the Washington Gas Light Co. was delayed for a period of months because of the refusal of approval by agents of Chase, Harris, Forbes Corporation," and "that all of the efforts at management by the Chase, Harris, Forbes Corporation, its affiliates and subsidiaries, including the Central Public Service Corporation, are detrimental and harmful to the Washington Gas Light Co. and increases the cost of operation thereof."

Chase, Harris, Forbes Corporation "has controlled the capital stock" of the local gas company "in such a manner that annual meeting of the stockholders has been continued from January, 1931," until tomorrow.

AUTOPSY IS SOUGHT IN MIAMI SHOOTING

Mother of Haden Clarke Not Satisfied He Killed Self in Flier's Home.

Miami, Fla., May 7 (A.P.).—An autopsy on the body of Haden Clarke in the belief that he was slain in the home of his fiancee, Mrs. J. M. Keith-Miller, was asked by his mother today as State Attorney N. Vernon Hawthorne investigated a reputed leak in evidence against Capt. W. N. Lancaster.

Lancaster, flying partner of the Australian aviatrix for five years, is in jail here on a charge of murdering Clarke in what Hawthorne described as a love triangle.

Mrs. Ida Glyde Clarke, professor of journalism at the University of Miami, said a report of her family physician, Dr. Carleton Deederer, led her to believe her son was beaten on the head before he was shot in the temple.

The physician's account of finding a fracture at the base of the skull and bumps on the head led her to discredit claims of Capt. Lancaster and Mrs. Keith-Miller that Clarke committed suicide.

Mrs. Clarke's expression of a desire for an autopsy was made informally and no formal request had reached Hawthorne today. He was advised of her statement and replied "if there is sufficient reason for disinterring the body, I certainly shall order it done. I want to learn Mrs. Clarke's reason for such action, however."

Haden Clarke lived and attended school in Washington during the World War, when his mother was head of a department here of the Pictorial Review magazine. The department was "Your Boy and Mine" and was written for the benefit of mothers whose sons were serving in the war.

His father was Thomas H. Clarke, one-time editor of the Nashville (Tenn.) Banner, and his grandfather, Beverly Clarke, was the first United States Minister to Guatemala.

Feminists Make World Court Plea

Reservation to Prevent Sex Discrimination Urged Before Senators.

(Associated Press.)

A reservation to the Root protocol for American adherence to the World Court to prevent sex discrimination in the administration of international law was demanded at a hearing before the Senate foreign relations committee yesterday by the National Woman's Party. A protest against such a reservation was filed, however, by the National League of Women Voters.

Miss Laura Berrien, speaking for the Woman's Party said the reservation was necessary to prevent nullification of the stand taken by the United States against The Hague nationality convention, which she contended discriminates against women.

A statement filed with the committee by the League of Women Voters contended that the equal rights reservation would be "extraneous" and "untimely." Chairman Borah said the committee would probably vote on the reservation next Wednesday and predicted a vote on the protocol itself might be had at that time.

International Sympathy Is Extended to France

(Associated Press.)

The assassination of President Doumer of France brought forth expressions of sympathy and mourning in capitals throughout the world.

President Hoover sent Premier Tardieu a message saying that he was "grieved beyond expression" that the grief of France was shared "by all the United States."

BERLIN—Flags were at half-mast over President Von Hindenberg's place, the chancellery, the foreign office and the Reichstag building.

LONDON—The Lord Chamberlain announced at Buckingham palace that the court would observe mourning for one week. The royal courts scheduled for Wednesday and Thursday, will, however, be held, and those being presented will not have to observe mourning. The presentees include several American women.

Moscow—the Communist International declared French statements of a suspected connection between the assassin and the Communist party were a "slanderous" attempt to absolve Russian white (anti-Soviet) guards of guilt. The Communists and Soviet newspapers described Paul Gorgouloff, the assassin, as a Fascist and head of the "All-Russian National Peasants," stamping him as an active counter-revolutionary and enemy of Bolshevism.

ROME—"The assassin struck not only one man but wounded and humiliated humanity," Premier Mussolini told the Chamber of Deputies. "In this moment when politics are silent and only humanity speaks we wish the French people to feel the frank and heartfelt sympathy of the Italian people."

WARSAW—The government decided to send a special delegate to the funeral. The Russian emigre colony met and condemned the assassin's act, and expressed admiration to France for offering a haven to many Russian emigres.

MADRID—Salvador de Madariaga, Spanish ambassador at Paris, was instructed to express official condolence and to attend the funeral.

BRUSSELS—The court declared eight days of mourning.

MEXICO CITY—Sympathy to the French people was extended by President Ortiz Rubio and Foreign Minister Tellez.

SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic—President Trujillo declared three days of national mourning.

SLAYER OF DOUMER TERMED AS RED IN FRENCH NEWSPAPER

"Green Russians" or Russian "Fascists," and that he dreamed of himself as the Fascist dictator of Russia and would oust the Soviets. The organization was so small as to be negligible.

Tomorrow France goes to the polls in the run-off of the parliamentary election and one effect of the president's assassination may be a swing away from the extreme left, perhaps improving Premier Andre Tardieu's chances of winning a parliamentary majority.

The general prediction was that the trend of the election would be moderate, swinging neither too far to the right nor left, and that a government of Republican Union, with Tardieu and Edouard Herriot, leader of the Radical Socialists, collaborating, might result.

Tardieu exhorted the people to be calm in the election, which will precede the election of a new president on Tuesday and a solemn state funeral for Doumer on Thursday.

Body Lies in State.

A few minutes after Doumer died early today in the public hospital of Beaujon, his body was taken to the palace, where it was laid out in the green room, dressed in ceremonial costume with the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honor across the chest. Heavy bandages hid his face, shattered by one of the assassin's bullets.

Mme. Doumer, her son, two daughters and grandchildren kept vigil beside the body, under the electric candelabra of the salon. No visitors were permitted, but thousands passed the palace in a slow procession of tribute.

Cardinal Verdier, Archbishop of Paris, blessed the body, although Doumer was not a Catholic. The body will be placed in the Ardent Chapel tomorrow, where it may be viewed by government and foreign dignitaries and members of the public.

The national funeral procession will leave the Elysee Palace at 10 a. m. Thursday, following the Rue de Rivoli to Notre Dame Cathedral, where Cardinal Verdier will pronounce the benediction. The procession will then climb to the Pantheon, the "Temple of Glory," where many of the nation's illustrious dead are buried, including the previously assassinated president, Sadi Carnot, who was killed in 1894. The Pantheon contains the heart of Voltaire, and the remains of Jean Jacques Rosseau, Emile Zola and others.

Tardieu's Proclamation.

The following proclamation was issued to the nation by Premier Tardieu today:

"To the French people: The president of the republic has been assassinated. The whole of France is stricken with astonishment and plunged into consternation as she mourns the illustrious elder whose life was spent in her service and whose four sons died in her defense.

"She inclines before the saddened widow who this morning at the hospital bed closed the eyes of her husband, who also fell on the field of honor.

"Honor our chief by the only homage he would have desired, by our calm and our dignity. Tomorrow the country elects its representatives and on Tuesday the National Assembly designates the new president. On Thursday the people of Paris will conduct Paul Doumer to the Pantheon.

"In keeping with the memory of a great servant in the execution of its laws, France knows how to express its sorrow and unity.

"Vive la France! Vive la republique!

"TARDIEU."

Successor Named Tuesday.

According to law, the Senate and Chamber of Deputies will meet at the Palace of Versailles on Tuesday and elect the new president by ballot. He will assume office immediately. Albert Le Brun, president of the Senate, is the logical choice by tradition, and may be elected unopposed, unless the Radical Socialists have enough success in tomorrow's election to encourage Paul Painleve to be a candidate.

After the election of the president, Tardieu will submit his government's resignation, but probably will be asked to remain in office until the new Parliament—to be elected tomorrow, assembles in June and another government is formed.

The election campaign closed quietly, the candidates canceling their final speeches, although the Nationalist press violently attacked the Left wing.

The country's foreign policy, especially on disarmament and reparations, is not likely to be changed much either by the assassination or election. Either Le Brun or Painleve would favor the policies on both issues as outlined by Tardieu at Geneva.

Meanwhile, alienists were studying the case of Gorgouloff, the murderer. Unless he can prove complete insanity he will go to the guillotine for first degree murder. He was formally charged with the assassination today. Previously the charge had been attempted assassination.

He freely admitted the crime, saying he did it because France had aided Soviet Russia with loans. He poses as an antibolshevik Russian and claims to hate the Soviets.

Gorgouloff insisted he had no accomplices but police are making a careful inquiry. It was rumored he was accompanied at the assasination by a man and a woman, one of whom was heard to say, "He didn't miss," before disappearing into the crowd at the reception.

Widespread Inquiry.

It was decided to send investigators to Lyons, Berlin, Prague and Switzerland to find out about his connections. His wife, a Swiss, was due at Lyons from the Riviera tonight and will continue to Paris tomorrow for questioning. Gorgouloff's brother-in-law at Lyons told police Gorgouloff always appeared normal and never showed criminal tendencies.

The attorney general will take charge of the case and direct alienists to prepare for the trial.

A determined fight will be made to send him to the guillotine.

It was remarked as interesting today that one of Doumer's last official acts was to commute the death sentence of Alexandre Boyer, who with his brother, Eugene, was due to be guillotined this morning for the murder of an aged woman whom they robbed of $31. The execution of Eugene was postponed because of Doumer's death.

The cabinet proclaimed 40 days of national mourning today, during which flags on government buildings will be at half-staff and all members of the government and the diplomatic corps will refrain from public engagements.

The mourning for Doumer was not confined to France, but caused expressions of deep regret from governments all over the world. Ambassadors of the Vatican, the United States, Britain, Germany, Italy, Russia and almost every other power represented here streamed to the foreign office to express the official condolences of their governments.

U. S. Sympathy Extended To French by Hoover

(Associated Press.)

Official Washington grieved yesterday over the death of President Paul Doumer of France.

President Hoover sent this message of condolence to Premier Andre Tardieu:

"I am grieved beyond expression to learn of the death of President Doumer. The great grief of France is shared by all the United States, and my fellow countrymen join with me in extending to you and the French people sincere sympathy in their sorrow. I beg of you to convey to the family of President Doumer Mrs. Hoover's and my own heartfeit condolences in this bereavement."

The Acting Secretary of State, William R. Castle, jr., sent to Premier Tardieu the following telegram:

"The sad intelligence that President Doumer has succumbed to the injuries so cruelly inflicted by an assassin has cast a gloom over the entire country. France has lost a loyal citizen and a beloved president, who has made the supreme sacrifice for his country. The world at large will mourn Mr. Doumer's death, and my Government and fellow citizens join with me in extending heartfelt condolences."

Assassin Owned Cache of Poison

Raid on Home Also Yields Will Dated May 3; Wife Innocent.

Monte Carlo, May 7 (A.P.).—A quantity of poison and a will dated May 3 leaving everything to his wife were found by police today in the home here of Paul Gorgulov, the slayer of President Doumer.

The poison, sufficient to wipe out the whole population of Monaco, the will and copies of Russian and Bulgarian newspapers were the only things found in the search of the apartment where the assassin and his wife lived.

The assassin's wife, who was arrested last night, will reach Paris tomorrow and will be closely questioned there by the authorities, who chiefly desire to learn her husband's means of living, as he appeared to have no regular work. After hours of questioning here, police said they were convinced that Mme. Gorgulov had no part in her husband's crime.

Adele Astaire at Ducal Estate.

Edensor, Derbyshire, England, May 7 (A.P.).—Adele Astaire, American dancer, arrived with her fiance, Lord Charles Cavendish, and his parents, the Duke and Duchess of Devonshire, at Chatsworth House, the ducal seat, today and there were rumors that the young couple would be married next Monday afternoon.

CLEPHANE RELEASED IN SNIPER SHOOTINGS

Civil Engineer's Movements, Checked by Police, Held to Prove Alibi.

Arthur Hamilton Clephane, 21, held for two days by police for questioning in regard to the series of shootings attributed to the sniper, was released late yesterday.

The youth was arrested as the result of a two weeks' investigation by Homicide Squad Detectives Floyd A. Truscott and Dennis J. Murphy. Three guns and a paair of gogles were found in his apartment at the Valley Vista, 2032 Belmont road northwest.

Checking over his explanation of his movements during the times of the shootings attributed to the sniper, the detectives said they were convinced Clephane had no connection with them. An ironclad explanation of the whereabouts of the young man on the night Paul Riedel, Mount Pleasant street baker, was killed, was obtained, the detectives said.

Throughout his detention, Clephane, who is a civil engineer and member of a prominent family, remained unperturbed.

More than 200 girls participated in the program which was built around Indian legends.

The performers were in more than 20 dances, with Miss Ford taking the leading part. Others outstanding in the cast were Miss Jenilee Knight, of Big Stone Gap, maid of honor; Miss Mary Shelton, of Farmville, as Spring, and Miss Helen Warren, of Norfolk, as Winter.

Mob Demands 2 Men Charged With Murder

Gastonia, N. C., May 7 (A.P.).—A mob gathered before the Gaston County Jail early today and demanded two Negroes, charged with killing Harold Carter, 18, filling station operator, but dispersed when shown the men were not in the jail.

Alec Grier and Clyde Smith, the Negroes, were removed to Charlotte yesterday. They are accused of killing Carter in a holdup Sunday. The jailer said there were at least 75 in the mob, most of whom were masked and heavily armed.

VIRGINIA GOLD CUP IS WON BY MELITA

Jack Skinner's Mount Is in Front Throughout Warrenton Classic.

Warrenton, Va., May 7 (A.P.).—Melita, with Jack Skinner up, outclassed the field today in the Virginia gold cup race to win by over a furlong. It was a one horse race most of the way, although Silvery Jim finishing second, pressed the leader at the start but later was outclassed by the flying Melita.

Mrs. Frank M. Gould's Ostend was nosed out by Silvery Jim in a driving finish and passed the barrier in third position. Seven started out of thirteen entered and only three finished.

Ranny Duffey on H. R. Bishop's Bulgold went down at the fourth fence but suffered no serious injury. Barleycorn, Mrs. Durant's bay gelding, the betting favorite, was pulled up half way around the course. The starters were Melita, Silvery Jim, Ostend, Grenadier, Guard, Slossons and Barleycorn.

It was the second win for Jack Skinner, who rode Soissons to a victory in the 1930 golden cup.

Mrs. T. W. Durant's Fugitive won the Warrenton Hunt Cup race at noon, and was followed home by Halo and Slaughton Boy. Six started, but again only three finished.

In the North Wales Cup, William Almy's William Kennett won, with Lewis Stuyvesant's How Devine second. Mrs. Thomas H. Somerville's Palm Off finished third. Eight of ten starters finished this two and a half mile race over brush.

Brother of Italy's Queen Dies.

Bolzano, Italy, May 7 (A.P.).—Prince Peter of Montenegro, brother of Queen Elena of Italy, died this morning.

BUTLER KILLS GROOM AND SHOOTS WOMAN

Drink-Crazed Servant Takes Own Life After Attack on His Employer.

Princeton, N. J., May 7 (A.P.).—A little Japanese butler, employed by Mrs. Dora W. V. Scott Boice, widely known horsewoman, went on a homicidal rampage today, wounded his mistress, killed a groom and took his own life.

Mrs. Boice, 34, divorced wife of Nelson B. Boice, Princeton business man, was shot in the breast and back after she had barricaded herself in a bathroom. The two bullets crashed through the door while she was frantically begging police, over an extension telephone, to hurry aid. Physicians said she probably would recover.

The groom, Larry Daley, 31, was killed while going to his employer's assistance.

The butler, Isamu Yamashita, had been drinking last night, police said. At 6:15 a. m., he broke into Mrs. Boice's bedroom, waving a .25-caliber automatic pistol and shouting:

"I'm going crazy. I'm going crazy, and I'm going to kill everybody."

Mrs. Boice, whose string of fifteen horses are well know in Eastern show centers, ran screaming to the bathroom and locked the door. With her she dragged a telephone with a long extension wire.

After calling the police, she opened a window and shouted for help. George Petty, a jockey, heard her and sent Daley to her assistance.

The butler, talking to himself, met the groom in the hall. A brief struggle for the pistol ensued. Yamashita fired once. Daley fell dying, with a bullet in his head.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Boice was pleading with a telephone operator to help hasten aid.

Then, shouting madly, the butler fired two shots through the bathroom door, went to Mrs. Boice's room, lay down on the bed, pressed the muzzle of the pistol against his temple, and fired.

WALTER P. CHRYSLER BELIEVES PLYMOUTH'S ADVANTAGES ARE SELF-EVIDENT TO ANYONE

I WANT YOU to compare the New Plymouth with the two other lowest-priced cars. I'm not afraid of your verdict because I know the Plymouth won't suffer. Can't suffer.

Besides that's the only right way to know this New 1932 Plymouth—or any other car.

I've been building automobiles for a long time, and I tell you I've never driven a smoother-running or easier-riding car than this New Plymouth. New sensational Floating Power engine mountings make the difference—a world of difference.

You must ride in it, and drive it, really to appreciate it. And I promise you a real surprise when you do. Words can't describe a Floating Power ride. It's something you have to feel and experience.

You'll like the New Plymouth when you see it. It's a bigger car. It's longer, more powerful, better looking. And it's priced to conform with the leaner pocketbooks of today.

Ride in the New Plymouth. Then ride in the other two lowest-priced cars. I'm ready to stand or fall on what the Plymouth can show you. I believe that a Plymouth ride means a Plymouth sale.

FACING THE CAMPAIGN.

But for President Hoover the American people might condemn equally the Republicans and Democrats of Congress for the folly of the last few weeks. Many Republicans are involved in the moves that have been made contrary to the public interest, with a shameless greed for spoils in behalf of special interests. But the Republican party as a whole fares better than the opposition party, which is directly accountable for the record of the House.

The Republican party is personified by President Hoover, in the public mind. He has formed its program and shaped its policies; he is to be its nominee for President; what he has done will make up the party's claims for public support. The Republicans in Congress who joined Democrats in blocking the Hoover program are a handicap which the party must carry. If Mr. Hoover wins it will be because of his own strength, and only incidentally because of assistance rendered by his party colleagues in Congress. In the public mind the good and bad are apt to be bunched together. Those Republicans who have fought loyally and skillfully with Hoover deserve more credit than they will receive.

A Democratic policy committee was formed in the early days of the session. Where is that committee now? It is an ancient jest, surviving in memory only to taunt the party for its failure to adopt any program or policy whatever. After one or two sterile meetings the committee failed to function. Speaker Garner could not put into effect any Democratic program, and the advice of Senate Democrats merely stirred up opposition in the House. Senator Robinson, Democratic leader, made a brave show of putting patriotism above partisanship early in the session, but he soon fell a victim to the deadly virus of politics, as he had done in the previous Congress in the matter of the drought dole. The Democratic record in the Senate is nearly as bad as the record of that party in the House.

Under the stiff jolts of President Hoover the two houses of Congress are making better progress. The net result of the session is likely to be a tax law that will substantially balance the budget. The corresponding legislation proposing economy as a help in balancing the budget has been shattered by greed, politics, and lobby influence, of which the House of Representatives should be thoroughly ashamed.

As the time approaches for the national conventions the record favors President Hoover and the Republican party, in spite of the misbehavior of individual Republicans in Congress. The national Democratic party looks for a leader, who has failed to appear in Congress. That party faces a disgusted electorate. Its nominee, whoever he may be, will be on the defensive because of the breakdown of the party during this session. The country will have before it one man who has weathered the storm and pushed forward a constructive program, and another man who is nominated by a distracted and discredited party having no program whatever.

MOTHER'S DAY.

What can be added to the tribute to motherhood which men gladly have paid since the dawn of time? What more can be said in praise of the dearest parent? The poets and philosophers of every age have spent themselves in quest of words meaningful and gracious enough to express the universal instinct of affection and gratitude toward those who bring us into the world, nourish, protect, serve and guide us through the tenderest years of our lives.

Ten thousand newspapers today will attempt the impossible. Ten thousand writers will endeavor to perform more creditably the duty which their innumerable predecessors felt and necessarily failed to fill. Adjectives will be sought to constructively qualify the ordinary tributes of filial devotion. It will be gloriously vain.

Perhaps the mere repetition of the word, the sacred title, Mother, is the fittest offering in the circumstances. It is a word with a loveliness all its own. Varying little from race to race, tongue to tongue, it is a phrase of limpid melody. Pronounce it from the heart, and there is in it a quality of gratitude, of appreciation, of loyalty, admiration and praise.

We speak of Mother's Day as though it were something special. But of course it is not. Every day is the day of mothers. They are the amalgam which binds past, present and future together, which makes the nations and supplies the schools, and which, were it missing, would send down to death and oblivion everything which men are and do and have. Mothers are life.

THE LOBBY PEST.

One sentence in President Hoover's statement to the public on the muddled congressional situation carries an extremely poignant sting. "It is an issue," he said, "between the people and the locust swarm of lobbyists who haunt the halls of Congress seeking selfish privileges for special groups and sections of the country, misleading members as to the real views of the people by showers of propaganda."

Congress has taken no official note of lobbying activities at this session, but the number of legislative panhandlers about the Capitol has been unusually large, and their work has been especially obnoxious.

A new type of lobbying has come into fashion in recent years. The most clever lobbyists have discovered that it is more effective to build their beacon fires "back home" in the States of those congressmen who are not responsive to persuasion. Consequently, they arouse the selfish interests of citizens in all parts of the country and induce them to make demands upon their representatives in Washington. Congressmen are deluged with letters and telegrams purporting to express "the will of the people." If these are ineffective, they are followed up by threats of political assassination.

A member of the Senate recently received a letter containing a demand for support of the so-called bonus. "The veterans are taking this matter so seriously," wrote this lobbyist, "that they are organizing to repudiate men in public office who feel that the voice of the people can be ignored." This is typical. Every blatant sponger cries out through what he misrepresents as the "voice of the people." A few dozen such letters, arriving on the eve of election, makes the average congressman's head swim.

It might seem strange that congressmen are gullible enough to give heed to this nonsense, but most members of Congress are novices, after all. The older heads know that this propaganda represents only the yapping of parasitic minorities and that for the most part the public is silent, except on election day. Noisy and troublesome constituents are nearly always seeking selfish legislation that is diametrically opposed to the public welfare.

The congressman who is duped by lobbyists is a greater menace than the lobbyists themselves. Lawmakers who truckle to special interests merely because they make the most noise can not be trusted to represent any one.

TRAIL OF THE REDS.

The French police have obtained information which convinces them that Paul Gorgolov, the slayer of President Doumer, is a Communist and a member of a bolshevik organization. Experts who tested Gorgolov assert that he is sane and knows what he is doing. If he is truly in his right mind his tale of being a White Russian emigre is beyond belief. No sane son of Russia, hounded and exiled by the bolshevists, could possibly find fault with France, which has been most hospitable in receiving the victims from the Soviet.

The fantastic story told by Gorgolov is exactly such a falsehood as would be concocted by Communists in consummating an assassination. They are a strange mixture of cunning and stupidity. It is a favorite trick with them to lay a clumsy set of false clues calculated to implicate opponents of the Soviet. Communist slayings in Europe and even in America are often so bizarre as to throw the authorities off the true scent, especially when many conspirators are involved. The agents of the Soviet are well supplied with money, and the ramifications of their plottings extend beyond the comprehension of the average police chief. But the head of the French Surete Generale is probably the best informed and most resourceful detective in the world, and when he gives assurance that Gorgolov is a member of a bolshevist organization he is entitled to belief.

NO TARIFF TINKERING.

Two reports from the Tariff Commission, concerning the effect of depreciated currency on American foreign trade and the fluctuation of tariff duties, are of vital importance to American industry. No evidence was found to indicate that countries off the gold standard have undue advantages in the American market for all of their products, but the report contains indisputable evidence that some industries in the United States have suffered because of competition from countries with depreciated currencies.

Price adjustments are taking place in the countries off the gold standard, so that the tendency is to restore the previous balance of competition. When the prices of raw materials and wages rise, depreciated currency does not enable manufacturers to sell to gold-standard nations with double profits. Furthermore, such countries as England must purchase raw materials abroad. On the whole, therefore, benefits derived from depreciated currency by exporters are limited to a few industries, and even for them such benefits are usually temporary.

The second report shows that the average American import duty has increased during the depression, without regard to any action of Congress or the Tariff Commission. This comes about through the decline of prices on articles taxed with specific duties, and because of the importation of a larger percentage of goods on which the tariff is high. In 1929 the average ad valorem duty, or its equivalent, was 35 per cent. In the year 1930-31 the corresponding average, adjusted for price changes, was 41 per cent.

For those commodities which are dutiable by the pound, yard, gallon, &c., the average ad valorem equivalent rose from 36 to 58 per cent because of falling prices. The higher rates of the Smoot-Hawley act account for only a small part of that increase. The specific duties paid on one group of commodities, which was not affected in any way by the Smoot-Hawley act, rose from 25 to 33 per cent ad valorem. It is quite evident, therefore, that the tariff in most instances affords adequate protection in spite of the intensified competition throughout the world.

Many rates, however, are fixed on a percentage basis and consequently fluctuate with commodity prices. Industries in this category are especially vulnerable to dumping by foreign countries whose currency has depreciated. In many cases such industries find themselves in desperate straits unless they can obtain relief through the Tariff Commission.

There seems to be no occasion for tinkering with the tariff by Congress because of currency depreciation abroad. It would be extremely difficult to relieve industries that are really affected without disturbing the entire tariff structure. But the door should be left open for relief in specific cases. At present there is some question as to whether the Tariff Commission has authority to take depreciated currency into consideration in adjusting rates to equalize costs of production here and abroad. A resolution definitely extending that authority to the commission would be the most expedient way of handling the situation, assuming, of course, that the President will veto the Democratic tariff bill, which is designed to prevent flexible tariff adjustment.

PAUL HUDSON.

GERMANY AND THE SOVIET

From the Riga Sevodnia of April 2.

Dr. Schacht, a former president of the Reichsbank, recently read a paper in Dusseldorf before a meeting of the industrials and bankers of the Ruhr and Rhine districts. Dr. Schacht analyzed in detail the economic relations which were established between Germany and U. S. S. R., after Rapallo, and came to the following conclusions:

"From a superficial point of view the business transactions of Germany with Moscow would appear to give an actual profit, particularly in the matter of exchange of goods. Some firms have made a profit out of the sale of their products, but in general Soviet business is fraught with loss to the national economics of Germany. Germany has frozen up about two milliards of marks in Soviet long-term acceptances, and, thanks to this, has bled the gold reserve of the Reichsbank to the amount of half a milliard marks, because it pays in foreign currency for one-quarter of the raw materials used for execution of the Soviet orders. Therefore, we have an actual loss from Soviet business. This without counting that the sale of Soviet raw materials and foodstuffs in Germany, in its turn, causes unfair competition to our internal trade and our agrarian industry, because the prices at which the Soviet dumps its goods are 50 per cent below our market values.

"A country which has absolute need of credit, as it has for fresh air, has no right to grant credits to another country, even one of undoubted solvency, for long terms, because in this process it bleeds itself and is obliged to curtail its operations and productivity, as is the case at the present moment in Germany. You may count up how many hundreds of of important and quite profitable establishments have been closed in Germany during this last year, owing to deficiency in working capital. All these undertakings could have been saved by one milliard of marks—that is, one-half of the credits we have granted the Soviet. The closing of the existence of hundreds of concerns costs Germany untold millions of marks, swallows up two or three times the apparent profit from Soviet orders, and may mean approach of catastrophe.

"Our industrials averred that the Soviet orders would decrease unemployment, but the exact opposite has happened. Besides this, by these operations with Moscow, we earn the just reproaches of our foreign creditors, who can not understand why we should have invested our short-term bank credits for two, three, and four year terms, in a country the solvency of which, at any rate at the present moment, is far from indisputable.

"What will happen with our industrials and the guarantee of the Reichsbank if the forecasts of many American, British and French financiers and industrials come true, the five-year plan proves a failure, and the Soviet government is obliged, sooner or later, to suspend payments? We shall not only lose two milliards of marks, of which one-half will have to be covered by the taxpayer, but we also risk the utter loss of our moral credit abroad. I personally should not wish to express my final opinion of the credit solvency and the longevity of the Soviet authority. It is exceedingly difficult to form a clear opinion in this complicated question. But for me one matter is beyond a doubt; the system ruling in Russia, of grandiose constructions based entirely on foreign credits, must crumble. It is impossible to establish gigantic concerns on credit when ten years may elapse before they show a return for the capital invested. In the meantime, there are required every month hundreds of millions of foreign currency, for payment of debts, and Moscow has no financial reverses.

"There is no foundation for optimism with reference to the future of the Soviet government and its solvency. The world crisis has only hastened the evidence of the internal complaint in the Soviet economic organism, and exposes more fully and deeply the diseased tissues. It is time for Germany, particularly its business community, to leave the sphere of illusions and to proceed to a sober analysis of matters and circumstances surrounding us. Confessing our mistakes, we should have the manliness to strike a clear and honest balance of the relations between us and Moscow."

SUDS FROM THE STEIN.

From the Los Angeles Times.

New York's dapper mayor, according to press dispatches, has placed the revenue the Government could collect from a tax on legalized beer at $500,000,000 annually. Of course in indulging his gift of prophecy Mayor Walker is free to choose whatever figure suits his fancy, and what are a few millions more or less among thirsty friends? But if beer ever again in the United States could be legalized, and if the Government could collect taxes of half a billion dollars from this newly created national thirst, the economic prospect through the coming wet years is not pleasant to contemplate.

Let us suppose through a stretch of the imagination, no more extravagant than that the New York executive has just displayed, that the Government placed a tax of 1 cent on every glass of beer. At this rate 50,000,000,000 glasses of beer would have to be consumed annually to put $500,000,000 into the national Treasury. At 10 cents a glass the Nation would be spending $5,000,000,000 a year on beer alone.

Where would this money come from? It would have to be from the same limited resources out of which the people are paying their present bills and household expenses. Beer patrons would have to deduct it from the money they are paying today to the small tradesman, the corner drug store, the sums set aside for real estate taxes or business licenses; and those who didn't drink would have to make up the deficit to the butcher, the baker and the candlestick maker. In effect, it would mean that Uncle Sam would be taking $5,000,000,000 a year from a sound pocket to put it into a pocket with a hole in it.

A LONG JOURNEY.

Things are seldom so bad that they can not be worse, and this must be the consolation of those who, continually made the butt of others for some peculiarity, come across a victim of circumstances suffering from the same peculiarity in a more exaggerated degree. The French Marshal Vivonne once indicated this feeling in a witty reply to the king. Vivonne and the Comte d'Auvergne were probably the most corpulent gentlemen of the court at the time. "Marshal, you really are getting too fat," said the king. "You ought to take more exercise." "Your majesty does not know, then, that I take a great deal of exercise?" "No; what do you do?" "I walk around the Comte d'Auvergne three times every day."

Reds Grant Turks Pact With Credit

$8,000,000 Is First Advance Given by Soviet in Its Foreign Trade.

MOSCOW, May 7 (A.P.).—A new economic alliance between Soviet Russia and Turkey, under which this country is extending an $8,000,000 long-term credit to its Islamic neighbor, was announced by Foreign Minister Tewfik Rushdi Bey, of Turkey, tonight.

The credit is the first ever granted by the Soviet government, which, until now, has been a seeker instead of a giver of credit in the world market. It is based on an exchange of goods in kind, without actual monetary payments.

Under the agreement, Soviet Russia will sell industrial tools, agricultural machines and fertilizers to Turkey, receiving as payment its choice of Turkey's natural resources, such as tobacco, wool, fruits and minerals.

The Turkish foreign minister was vague as to the exact length of the credit, but mentioned fifteen years as the possible term. He did not reveal the interest rate and other details, explaining that the credit was negotiated by economic experts who accompanied Premier Ismet Pasha of Turkey on his good-will visit to Russia and who will remain to iron out details.

Rushda Bey added that Soviet Russia had offered to grant a larger credit, but that Turkey had no need for more at this time. He indicated the agreement would be in the nature of an experiment by both governments, which if successful, might lead to further deals along the same line.

• • • •

TURKEY'S decision to make a monopoly of the importation of sugar and coffee and to buy those commodities from nations which buy Turkish tobacco is regarded by diplomats as the first step in a more general domination of trade by Mustapha Kemal's government.

Ismet Pasha, the Turkish premier, recently in Rissuia, disclosed before he left Turkey that he expected to study the Soviet government's monopoly of both the export and import trade of Russia for the purpose of devising means to stimulate Turkey's trade.

Persia has adopted the Soviet Russian system of trade monopoly and used it with considerable success in negotiating a trade agreement with Moscow. It is believed in diplomatic and commercial circles that Kemal has a similar plan in mind and may give Russian sugar preference in exchange for Russian purchases of Turkish tobacco.

• • • •

TURKEY produces little sugar. Sugar beet culture is carried on in a limited way in eastern Thrace, European Turkey, but the factories are small and supply only local trade.

In 1929 Turkey produced 90,389,000 pounds of tobacco, which is the chief crop. The finest tobacco is grown in the Samsoun area on the Black Sea and is Turkey's chief export item. The United States is the best customer for this type of tobacco.

Imports of the United States from Turkey far exceed the American exports to Turkey. Consequently, this country probably will not be affected materially by any new monopolies Turkey may establish. But the coffee and sugar exporting countries of the New World, most of which also produce tobacco and do not require Turkish tobacco, may be greatly affected by Kemal's new plans.

Turkey is a heavy importer of Russian petroleum and it is not unlikely that Kemal either will arrange to pay Russia for this product in tobacco or seek an oil supply elsewhere.

• • • •

THIS new plan for the exchange of commodities which is developing extensively among European governments threatens to wreck the ordinary commercial channels of trade and eliminate merchants.

Turkey bought 20,309 tons of Russian sugar in 1927-1928. The Russians frankly admit their own people need more sugar, but have continued their exports annually to realize cash.

In 1930 Russia produced 1,730,000 tons of raw sugar and a production of 2,850,000 tons was announced in 1931.

The Russian export of sugar for 1931 was planned to be 400,000 tons, and an export of 600,000 tons is included in plans for 1932.

Russia was asked to join the International Sugar Council in a movement to restrict world production of sugar, but declined to enter into any agreement.

Democrat Assails Party's Tax Stand

To the Editor the The Post—Sir: When the votes are counted next November the Democrats will have no one to blame for their defeat except themselves; and exhibit No. 1, entitled "The Action of the House on the Economy Bill," will be quite sufficient evidence, although other evidence, such as its action on the sales tax bill, would be sufficient to convince the country of the failure of Democratic leadership.

Even the veterans down in Representative Bulwinkle's North Carolina district can not be misled by the latter's motion to strike reductions in the veterans' graft. Instead of instructing the congressional committee to report back its findings and recommendations at the opening of the next session in December, Mr. Bulwinkle should have used the language "report back to Congress at any time after the elections," because the elections is the only reason for the motion. Those in close touch with the situation for years and who are better informed now than any committee can possibly become between now and December, unhesitatingly recommended the legislation which has been defeated. Those who know nothing about the question are not interested in the real truth of the facts and are prompted only by selfish political interest were responsible for the defeat of this much needed reform, which should have been enacted even if no saving would result from it.

As a lifelong consistent Democrat, my faith in the party has been sadly shaken. Other Democrats have expressed to me the same sentiment. Unless some miracle is performed in the intervening months, the Democratic cause in November will undoubtedly go down to a crushing defeat. Exhibit No. 1 above can not lightly be erased from the memory of the voters, who have seen their rights trampled on and the cause of justice shunted to one side in order to favor one class which happens to be well organized.

Sad Effects on Average Man Of U. S. Economy Plan Given

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: If Congress really intends to make a cut of $200,000,000 to $300,000,000 in the present appropriation already cut to the bone, it is showing remarkable inconsistency and poor judgment. What does it mean if this large amount is slashed off? It means that large purchases of materials will be cut off, thus throwing more thousands of people out of work, as the Federal Government now is one of the few agencies that can really afford to buy large quantities of materials. Many thousands of Federal employes must be thrown out into a jobless market, thus adding to the misery and distress already existing. Why throw out a large number of employes already shown to be receiving low average rate of salary and then be forced to appropriate later a far greater sum for relief from which no return in shape of service will be received?

It is easy for a man with a fortune to offer to work for the Government for $1 a year or for a representative getting $10,000 a year, plus large allowances, to stand a cut of 11 per cent, but the $2,000-a-year Government employe has to sit up nights worring where he will cut $220 out of his budget.

There has been much talk of hoarding holding off the return of good times. Why shouldn't the Government employe think of hoarding when with his average modest salary he does not know whether it is going to be cut 10 per cent or 20 per cent, or dropped altogether? He would be foolish not to save all he can now. With 1,000,000 Federal employes, consider the tremendous effect this must have upon the entire country.

It certainly appears far better in the present crisis to assess taxes to be paid by those who can best afford them than to add to unemployment misery.

It would appear that the general sales tax with the exemptions given would have been the easiest to bear of all the various taxes proposed, amounting, it is estimated, for the general sales tax, to $5 a year for the average man. In spite of the misleading arguments in Congress by the opponents, the burden would have been very light upon the ordinary man. The ordinary man is going to be hurt much worse by supertaxes upon capital and its income. Most business is very competitive anyhow, and with high taxes added to the always present risk, capital will refuse to take the chance. The result is that the factories will stay closed, no new ones will open, and the ordinary man is left, without a sales tax, it is true, but also without a job.

Logically, the time for Federal economies to be made is in times of prosperity. Federal employes dropped then can easily be located elsewhere and commercial life does not need the Federal business to carry it. In prosperous times, however, Congress pays little attention to economy. The policy that should be followed is that now under the urge of economy, plans be made for all the consolidations, reorganizations, &c., that are to be made, but that they be postponed until a time of prosperity comes again.

Skyscraper Fight In Capital Upheld

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have been disturbed over a recent editorial in The Post that contained the following words: "The famous Triangle west of the Capitol will be disappointing, viewed as a whole, because the height of these massed structures will not be in proportion to their enormous ground area. No bold towers will relieve the roof monotony. The preeminence of the Capitol and the Monument is thereby preserved, but nevertheless the acres of classic columned facades and low roofs may lack the variety that lends charm to architecture."

I wish to take exception to this statement, or at least to the inference that Washington would be improved if it could have "bold towers to relieve the monotony." To me the strikingly beautiful thing about Washington is the manner in which the city is kept subordinate to the Capitol and the Monument. The introduction of bold towers would mean, I fear, an era of skyscrapers, a danger which should be combated by every thinking man and woman.

If skyscrapers came, what would happen to the glorious vistas now enjoyed of the beautiful dome which by both night and day give distinction to the city as no other feature does or could do? The Monument is 550 feet high and can be seen from afar as a symbol of the city and of the great citizen in whose honor it was erected. What would be the result if through laxness on the part of the guardians of the city an Empire State Building were to be erected? Such a building would be nearly twice as high as the Monument, and the latter, now accepted as one of most beautiful structures in Washington, would become by contrast a moderate sized obelisk dwarfed and killed by the symbol of "bigger and better buildings."

No; let us keep a vigilant eye upon the city that is already immensely satisfying as an example of what can be accomplished by wise conservatism, and fight to the last breath to prevent the arrival of skyscrapers. I have lived many years in New York City, and I know whereof I speak.

Long's Indorsement of Roosevelt Is Hit

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Today's press dispatches state that Senators Norris and Long have indorsed and promised to support Gov. Roosevelt of New York. This will be the best news the Republicans have heard in many a day, since it means that thousands of dyed-in-the-wool Democrats will desert the Democratic party and vote with the Republicans because of this alignment.

When radicals such as these two senators come out and publicly indorse the candidacy of any person, it is high time that the party with which such indorsed candidate is affiliated should see to it that some other person receives the nomination.

Post's View of U. S. Expenses Praised

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have noticed, with interest and much appreciation, the excellent editorial in this morning's (May 3) Post on the general subject of economy in governmental expenditures. The Post seems to have had a consistent program in this matter; some months ago, you published a list of appropriations, calling for some thirty billions of dollars, that had already been presented to Congress as bills for enactment, and since then, you have regularly hammered away at unwise and improper expenditures. While many other papers may write as soundly as does The Post on these matters, yet it is The Post that I read. I am very glad that you shake the big stick so frequently in behalf of the poor tax payer.

For I am a tax payer. I pay municipal and State taxes and the Federal income tax, although the amounts are relatively small, they come out of my pocket, and I am very much interested as to the manner in which they are spent. Consider the two or three hundred dollars of income tax that I send to the Treasury: what does it do? Does it pay the monthly stipend of an "almost totally disabled" emergency retired officer who draws down, in addition, a fat salary in the Veterans' Bureau? Does it help to pay the salary of a representative's niece or mother-in-law, who has never been to Washington, and does no work for the Government? Does it help to pay the expenses in hospital of a "veteran" who was never out of the United States, who incurred neither danger nor disability, and who is hospitalized merely because he caught a venereal disease a few weeks ago? If my money goes for any such purposes, I object. But if it helps to pay the expenses of a veteran who really suffered in behalf of his country, then I am glad.

There are essential purposes for which expenditures must be made. These are included, rather generally, in expenditures for the State, War, Navy, Treasury and Postoffice Departments. And there are certain worthy objects, such as the care of disabled veterans, which the Nation is glad to support. The unworthy and nonessential objects of expenditure must go. Some check must be placed on congressional voracity for "pork." The ease with which the House passed a bill for widows of veterans, and the difficulty with which the same House passed the tax bill a few days ago, suggests the manner in which a check may be provided. Insist that every time a bill calling for appropriations is passed, that a tax bill be also passed. If that fails, let the President veto the bill because of lack of funds to meet the expenditure.

Charity Coupons Plan Shows Up Panhandler

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Some months ago you published a communication in which the suggestion was made that relief organizations should issue books of coupons, to be sold to the charitably inclined, which the purchaser might distribute to men on the streets who ask for "the price of a cup of coffee." Recently one of these organizations followed the suggestion. I bought some of the coupons, which when presented at the designated headquarters entitle the holder to "two meals, lodging and bath."

Within the past week I have been approached three times by panhandlers who asked for money. In each instance I have offered one of these tickets for "two meals, lodging and bath," and in each case the offer has been declined.

It might be well for Gen. Glassford to secure a few of these tickets, place them in the hands of a plainclothesman, and direct that officer to arrest the next mendicant caught soliciting alms who declined to accept the proffered offer of "two square meals, a night's lodging and a bath," especially the bath.

THEN AND NOW

By EDGAR A. GUEST

Time was that we were boastful men,
But, oh, the tasks were easy then,
The problems simple, too,
With many a pretty platitude
We graced a strutting attitude,
As men are apt to do.
We talked of wisdom, service, pluck,
But never a word was said of luck.

With fortune tapping at the door,
We grew to bragging more and more,
We thought our hearts were stout.
We talked of courage, thinking then
That we were all courageous men,
But what was there to doubt?
The skies were fair, the highways straight.
Did we our prowess overrate?

Today the world needs able men,
Unflinching, brave and stable men,
Courageous men and stout;
It needs the spirit and the grit,
The patience, cleverness and wit
To work deep problems out.
It needs as daily storms occur
The sort of men we thought we were.

New Leader At Belgrade Knows U. S.

Jugoslavs' Premier Has Been in America and Has Relatives Here.

BELGRADE, May 7 (A.P.).—Voyislav, Marinkovich, the new prime minister of Jugsolavia, brought to his post a full decade of experience with international affairs and keen knowledge of Western methods and events. He has been foreign minister since 1922.

Unlike his predecessor, Gen. Peter Zivkovich, who learned life in the hard school of Balkan warfare, Dr. Marinkovich was educated in Paris. He took his degree there in law, economics and political science.

He has also been in the United States, understands American viewpoints better than many of his Western contemporaries and has family ties across the Atlantic. His niece is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Frothingham, of Brooklyn and Paris.

Dr. Marinkovich was born here May 1, 1876. After his student years in Paris he returned to Belgrade and began his political career as a minor official in the ministry of finance. In 1906 he was elected to the Skupshtina (the Serbian House of Deputies) from Pozarevatz, and the district returned him seven times, the last time in 1931.

• • • •

IN 1913 he was a delegate to the conference at Paris which liquefied the financial questions raised by the Balkan wars. The next year he became minister of finance and in 1916 represented Serbia at the allied conference in Paris.

On the death of Stoyan Novakovich, head of the old progressive party, he became leader of that movement. He was one of the framers of the declaration of Corfu, which outlined the present kingdom of Jugoslavia.

Dr. Marinkovich is considered one of the most forceful parliamentary speakers in Jugoslovia. In the financial world he is looked upon as an authority on the special problems confronting the country today.

The new prime minister speaks fluent English, German and French. He is a man of great energy, but handicapped by illness. His special gift is a capacity for organization.

Deserving Workers In Italy Given Homes

Rome, May 7 (A.P.).—Each year hereafter six of Rome's most meritorious poor families will receive free homes from the government.

The practice was started this year by initiative of Premier Mussolini. Brand new houses, modest but embodying all modern facilities, were presented to half a dozen families on Rome's 2,685th birthday anniversary.

Any father who has lived in Rome for ten years and has three children born in four years is eligible to enter the contests, providing he earns the family living by modest and honorable labor.

Of the six families awarded the prizes this year one was of eleven children, one of nine, three of seven and one of six. One of the fathers was a street car conductor, another a common laborer, yet another a teacher of drawing.

The greater the number of children the more chance the family has of winning the prize. A medical examination of all members of the family is part of the proceedings in sifting the applicants.

Rome's birthday falls on April 21, and on that day every year the houses will be turned over to the winning applicants.

The government has suggested that persons or concerns in a position to do so, follow its example, in order to benefit a larger number of the deserving needy.

Mayan City, Just Found, Stirs Hopes

Key to Fall of Old Culture Sought at Calakmul, Jungle Covered.

(Associated Press.)

NEW clews to the fate of a lost American civilization rivaling Egypt's in glory will be sought among the jungle-covered ruins of Calakmul, Maya city just found in Yucatan.

Sculptured on overturned monuments and vine-entangled temples are dates and other records that may reveal the story of the rise and fall of the Maya empire, which flourished in Central America before the Spaniards came.

Calakmul, just visited by an expedition of the Carnegie Institution under Dr. Sylvanus Morley, is the latest of many great Maya cities to be discovered in the jungles of Yucatan and Guatemala.

The Maya empire flourished there for 1,500 years, from the time of the birth of Christ until the discovery of America.

In Calakmul archeologists hope to find why the Mayas migrated from Guatemala, leaving their magnificent cities abandoned behind them and built new cities in Yucatan.

Calakmul lies just over the northern Guatemala border in Mexico, midway between the centers of the old empire, which flourished nearly 1,000 years, and the new empire, to which the Mayas migrated between 500 and 700 A. D.

• • • •

CALAKMUL was a great religious center, Dr. Morley reports, for it contains many temples and monuments carved with figures of religious subjects. The site, he says, is of "enormous size."

Two Maya cities, Uaxactun, one of the chief cities in the old empire region, and Chichen Itza, a city of the new empire, are now being excavated and their inscriptions deciphered by Carnegie Institution archeologists.

Calakmul was a city of the old empire, which centered around a chain of lakes. The Mayas farmed on the slopes of the hills around the lakes.

Loose soil from the farms gradually may have been washed down into the lakes, filling them until they became mere swamps, which exist there today, some scientists believe.

The swamp water, becoming contaminated, may have caused an epidemic of disease that drove the Mayas from the region, they suggest.

The remnants of the Mayas, who still live in Yucatan, know nothing of their ancestors.

Turk Women Flock Into Ranks of Labor

Istanbul, May 7 (A.P.).—How Turkish women have swarmed into the ranks of labor during eight years of Kemalist emancipation is shown by the first statistics of the kind, indicating that in Istanbul alone there are 13,179 women laborers.

Among these, 6,000 are employed in tobacco factories, 365 in the industry of salting fish, 4,500 in knitting factories and 950 in dressmaking establishments.

Remarkable are 60 women "hamals," Turkey's human delivery wagons, famous for their ability to carry everything from giant fish to grand pianos on the saddles strapped to their backs.

Chile Fights Begging

Santiago, Chile, May 7 (A.P.).—Newspapers here have opened subscription lists for money with which to lodge and feed street beggars and especially to stop the growing practice of professional women beggars renting children to help them stage hard luck stories.

THE DIPLOMATIC POUCH

By HAROLD J. T. HORAN

"Millions for Defense, Etc."

DORIS DUKE, the world's wealthiest heiress precipitated a furore among the unmarried diplomats of the Capital last week. News of her presence spread around and caused an effervescence of activity amongst the bachelors. Count Alberto Marchetti and Pierre de la Blanchetal, however refused to be budged from their bridge tables. "Anyway," mused Marchetti, "Mussolini has banned our marriages with non-Italians."

The Lucky Strike heiress became almost an affair of state at the British embassy where a diplomatic assignment, however lowly, is often a preface to an advantageous alliance. Roger M. Makins and H. W. A. Freese-Pennefather the new third secretaries, were aglow. Baron Paul Schell of the Hungarian legation was prepared for an extraordinary floral attack. Suave Vicomte de Lantsheere, secretary of the Belgian embassy, planned a little intimate party—"just a few friends" in her honor and even the Roumanian minister, Charles A. Davila, appraised by telephone from here seriously thought of coming back from New York for the occasion.

Innocently unconscious of the furore she had caused amongst the diplomatic bachelors, the lovely Doris was seen only with Americans.

Wit of the Bench.

BENJAMIN NATHAN CARDOZO, the latest member of the United States Supreme Court, has things in common with his predecessor, Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes other than a broad liberalism. The eminent New York jurist has the same mellow quiet humor which has become legendary about the figure of the nonagenarian Holmes.

The other day a youthful barrister had called on the former chief justice of the New York Court of Appeals to present his respects before appearing before the court on some legal motion. The lawyer began:

"Mr. Justice, I am frank to tell you that on this my first appearance before the court, I shall be very much awed."

The justice paused for a while and then replied quietly:

"Well, young man, I may tell you that I was rather awed myself."

Omar at the Falls.

Yadollah Azodi, the charge d'affaires of Persia made his first visit to Niagara Falls last week. The Persian diplomat was accompanied by his wife. As Azodi beheld the tons of water sweeping over the Falls, he turned to his wife and remarked:

"What beautiful fountains all that water would make in Teheran!"

The Persian successor to the former Minister Mephtah, here, is one of the richest families in Persia deriving his wealth from vast fruit farms where the most luscious Persian melons and the peaches of the Perfumed Garden grow in lush profusion.

The Sword and the Scalpel.

THE Latin American diplomatic corps has always included several eminent men of medicine. The present representative of El Salvador, Dr. Carlos Leiva, now living in New York was at one time at the French Hospital in San Francisco. Dr. Leiva had been already established as one of the leading surgeons on the Pacific Coast when the president invited him to become the minister here.

Mexican Ambassador Jose Manuel Puig Casauranc was also well known as a practicing physician in Mexico City before coming here to succeed former Ambassador Tellez.

The former Nicaraguan minister here was Dr. Juan V. Sacasa, one of the outstanding medical men of Nicaragua and former professor at the medical school there. Dr. Sacasa returned to Nicaragua to present himself for the presidential elections and in his absence he has been succeeded by his nephew, Dr. Luis Manuel Debayle, who is a brilliant surgeon.

Dr. Debayle married an American girl while he was studying at the University of Pennsylvania Medical School. After graduating there, he spent three years with the Mayo Brothers and then returned to Philadelphia for additional work. This has naturally given him a remarkable medical career which won for him the reputation of the outstanding surgeon in his country. He has accepted the post of charge d'affaires here at the request of President Moncada and has handled a very delicate situation with discretion and finesse.

Chile and Chilly.

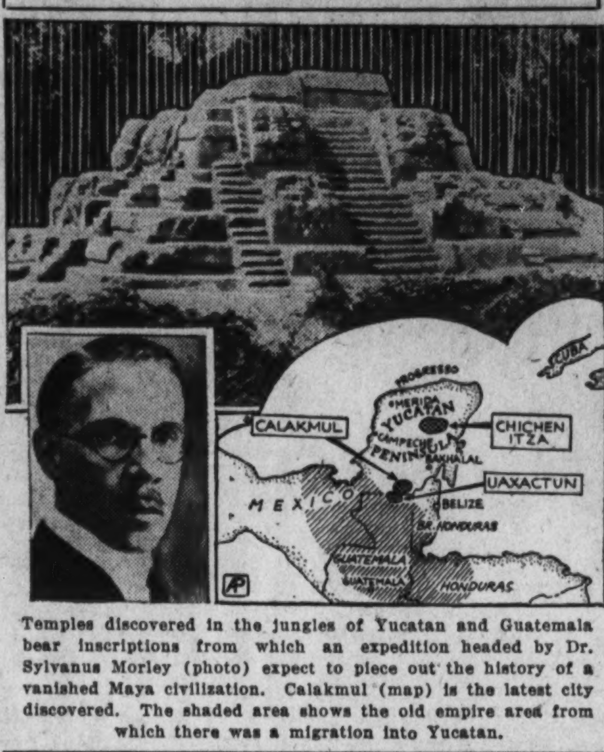
CHARALAMBOS SIMOPOULOS, the Greek Minister, was attending a party the other night and went out on to the balcony to smoke a cigarette between rubbers. Most of the guests were diplomats, but on the balcony was a young man that the minister did not seem to remember. The young man looked at His Excellency and then inquired pleasantly:

"Chilly?"

M. Simopoulos mindful of the glory that was Greece drew himself up proudly and said:

"No, Greece."

Clews to an Empire's Decline



Temples discovered in the jungles of Yucatan and Guatemala bear inscriptions from which an expedition headed by Dr. Sylvanus Morley (photo) expect to piece out the history of a vanished Maya civilization. Calakmul (map) is the latest city discovered. The shaded area shows the old empire area from which there was a migration into Yucatan.

FROM A SENATOR'S DIARY

Being the Day-by-Day Observations of a "Member-at-Large" Set Down for His Own Satisfaction.

By the 97th Senator.

Wednesday.

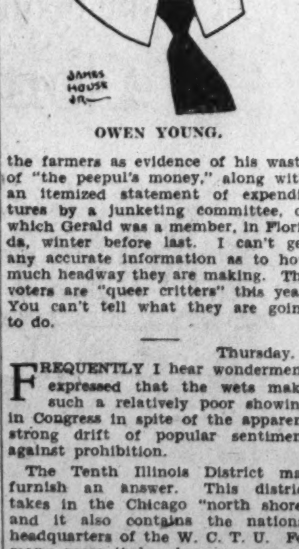
THREE of my insurgent colleagues who came up for reelection this year are facing trouble in their primaries. Smith Brookhart's enemies are trying to get his scalp in Iowa. The Republican regulars are on the warpath in Wisconsin against John Blaine. And in North Dakota, Gerald Nye, the slush fund investigator, is being opposed for renomination by the conservative wing of the party.

If reports from Iowa are to be believed, Brookhart has a tough fight on his hands. Five candidates are lined up against him, which, of course, splits the opposition, but under the Iowa primary law Brookhart must poll at least 35 per cent of the total vote cast in order to win the nomination. That isn't going to be easy, not even for a resourceful rabble rouser like Brookhart, especially in view of recent straw votes showing a marked decline in his popularity. If he or any of his opponents fails to get 35 per cent of the total primary vote, the duty of selecting the nominee devolves upon the State convention. Brookhart knows that the convention will be dominated by his foes and that unless he wins in the primary he will have a mighty slim chance of retaining his seat in the Senate.

One of Brookhart's opponents is a merchant named Henry Field who operates a radio station over which he broadcasts to the farmers. Mr. Field evidently is a kindly soul who thinks a political contest should be conducted on an impersonal plane. After he announced his candidacy he invited Brookhart to a chicken dinner and to use his radio station. Brookhart replied by inviting him to get out of the senatorial race pronto. Mr. Field was pained and shocked at such rudeness, but he decided to stay in the primary. His political strength is uncertain, but he may cause Brookhart plenty of grief.

Blaine will be opposed by the rampant, 32-year-old editor, John B. Chapple, who announced his candidacy from the White House steps after talking with President Hoover. The regulars in Wisconsin are much encouraged as a result of the recent presidential primary, in which for the first time they won a majority of the delegates over the La Follette machine. They think they have a fair chance to beat Blaine. If the La Follette organization throws its full strength behind Blaine, as it probably will, the odds, I think, will favor Blaine.

Gerald Nye will have George Shafer, Republican Governor of North Dakota, as an opponent. They are showing the expense accounts of Gerald's slush fund committee around among the farmers as evidence of his waste of "the peepul's money," along with an itemized statement of expenditures by a junketing committee, of which Gerald was a member, in Florida, winter before last. I can't get any accurate information as to how much headway they are making. The voters are "queer critters" this year. You can't tell what they are going to do.



JAMES HOUSE JR.

OWEN YOUNG.

Thursday.

FREQUENTLY I hear wonderment expressed that the wets make such a relatively poor showing in Congress in spite of the apparent strong drift of popular sentiment against prohibition.

The Tenth Illinois District may furnish an answer. This district takes in the Chicago "north shore" and it also contains the national headquarters of the W. C. T. U. For many years it has been represented in Congress by the rotund, but capable, Carl Chindblom. Mr. Chindblom, until recently, has been voting dry, never doubting he was correctly interpreting the wishes of a large majority of his constituents. Not long ago, however, there were signs of a change of sentiment in the Tenth District. The wets brought out a candidate against Chindblom. Soon the opposition was making such headway against him that he decided to turn wet himself. He supported the referendum proposal in the House and declared for beer. The infuriated drys thereupon put up a candidate against him.

A three-cornered race resulted, with two wets and one dry fighting it out.

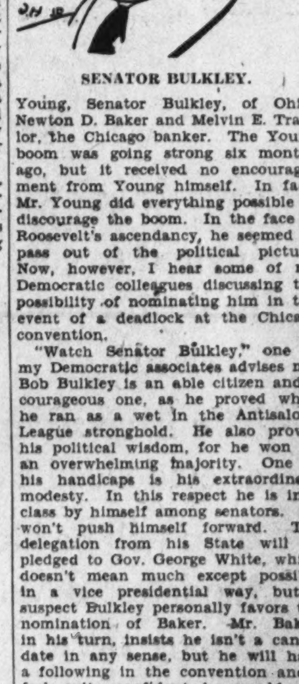
The unofficial returns showed Chinblom's wet opponent the winner, the dry candidate trailing by a narrow margin, and Chindblom running several thousand votes behind. An official recount now, however, gives the Republican nomination—which in that district has been considered equivalent to election—to the dry candidate by a majority of 73, out of a total vote of around 80,000.

Thus, in all probability, the citizens of the Tenth Illinois District will continue to be represented in Congress by a dry, although the vote cast for the wet candidates was almost double that cast for the prohibitionist.

Friday.

THE dark horse paddock in the Democratic presidential Derby is receiving careful scrutiny again. Some months ago it commanded respectful attention, but when Franklin Roosevelt began to run away from all his rivals in the early primaries it was neglected. Now that the Roosevelt campaign is sagging in the East, there is a renewed interest in the dark horses.

The dark horses include Owen D. Young, Senator Bulkley, of Ohio; Newton D. Baker and Melvin E. Traylor, the Chicago banker. The Young boom was going strong six months ago, but it received no encouragement from Young himself. In fact, Mr. Young did everything possible to discourage the boom. In the face of Roosevelt's ascendancy, he seemed to pass out of the political picture. Now, however, I hear some of my Democratic colleagues discussing the possibility of nominating him in the event of a deadlock at the Chicago convention.



SENATOR BULKLEY.

"Watch Senator Bulkley," one of my Democratic associates advises me. Bob Bulkley is an able citizen and a courageous one, as he proved when he ran as a wet in the Antisaloon League stronghold. He also proved his political wisdom, for he won by an overwhelming majority. One of his handicaps is his extraordinary modesty. In this respect he is in a class by himself among senators. He won't push himself forward. The delegation from his State will be pledged to Gov. George White, which doesn't mean much except possibly in a vice presidential way, but I suspect Bulkley personally favors the nomination of Baker. Mr. Baker, in his turn, insists he isn't a candidate in any sense, but he will have a following in the convention and I feel quite confident he would not refuse the nomination. Melvin Traylor is a long shot—an extremely long shot—but he has friends who send out circulars describing him as "a homespun American," who think the lightning may strike.

Before any of the dark horses gets a trial in the convention, however, Gov. Ritchie of Maryland probably will get a "workout." He has been busy making friends all over the country for years and few people can make friends easier than he can. He is the "first second-choice man" of a large number of the influential leaders of the Democratic organization.

Saturday.

TOM HEFLIN is gone and there is slim chance now of his coming back, my Alabama friends tell me. Tom's five-hour swan song won him no votes and the majority against him was bigger than I expected. He has "just begun to fight," he says, but I don't see how he can make the grade.

The Alabama Democrats have officially ostracized him and if he runs again he will have to run as an independent. That places him under a heavy handicap. After nearly 40 years on the public pay roll it's pretty tough to be separated from it just because you happened to guess wrong in an election, as Tom did in 1928.

The loss of Tom would be hard to bear if it were not for Huey Long. He more than compensates for Tom's political demise. In fact, his ravings make Tom's tirades seem mild.

Latin Lands Join in Plea To Tourists

Nonprofit Travel Bureau One Suggestion at Meeting Held in Capital.

(Associated Press.)

AMERICAN business men, awakening to the vast possibilities of Pan-American tourism, have set about to translate sketchy proposals for its development into practical cooperative organization.

Profiting by impetus given their cause by the fourth Pan-American commercial conference here last October, representatives of air, land and sea transportation companies met at the Pan American Union recently and arranged for appointment of a committee to survey the field.

That some of the millions of American dollars spent in European travel should be deflected into the other Americas, which are of increasing importance as United States markets, appeals to transportation men and manufacturers as sound business.

The group asked Director General Rowe of the union to name a committee to make a survey of existing accommodations and possibilities of future development of tourist travel and means to obtain its expansion.

• • • •

TRAVELERS returning from Latin America have stressed the range of attractions that await the American tourist there. Pleasant tropical isles, cities with Old World charm and mountain scenery to compare with the best Europe offers, they report all to be found on the American continent. Commercial conference delegates stressed the lack of popular information of the American public on their attractions, and the committee launched last week was asked to take up at once a study of means to stimulate interest in Pan-American travel, especially through organized advertising.

The committee was asked further to outline the basis of a plan for organizing cooperative action of governmental and other agencies in the United States and Latin America. Governmental delegates to the October conference had paved the way for such action with a resolution requesting the 21 American governments "as a matter of urgent attention for the stimulation of inter-American tourist travel" to undertake wherever possible the simplification of the formalities governing the arrival and departure of travelers.

An Argentine plan for a South American federation of tourism already has been recommended by the commercial conference to the various governments for study in its relation to the development "of commerce and closer relations between the countries."

• • • •

WHEN the union committee convenes it will have before it, among other plans, one prepared by E. A. Hellmund, who attended the October conference as technical adviser of the Colombian delegation. The plan, approved by President Olaya of Colombia, stressed the formation of a Pan-American tourist bureau, with headquarters in New York City.

This bureau would cooperate with national tourist commissions, already established by some of the nations and to be established by others, and with private transportation companies and travel agencies.

The meeting was attended by representatives of the Ward Line, Pan-American Airways, the Lloyd Brasileiro Line, the Munson Line, the Grace Line, the United Fruit Co., the Southern Pacific and the Baltimore & Ohio Railways, the Furness Prince Line and by representatives of the Commerce Department and the Pan-American Union.

They considered four concrete criticisms of present tourism in Latin America: that only the most likely prospects are worked; sales efforts are scattered; tourist agents have been given no inducement to push Latin American sales, and prospective tourists ignore what Latin America has to offer.

• • • •

THE memorandum listed 19 advantages to be derived from cooperative advertising:

Greater support and cooperation from agents, efficient follow-up of leads, improved solicitations, wide range of offerings over their lines, support of nonpartisan organizations for the operation of tours, thorough training of agents and salesmen in the advantages and merits of their system, increased traffic over their respective lines, building up of out-of-season business, increased revenue and gretaer publicity.

The Hellmund plan for a travel bureau in New York City was for incorporation of a nonprofit body, to be supported by subsidies in the form of yearly membership fees from each Latin American national tourist commission and from contributions from the various media in the United States interested in the promotion of travel to Latin America.

Hellmund told the conference delegates:

"The existing so-called 'depression' has caused a lull in the tourist travel to Europe. However, the thirst of the American public for travel is unabated and the time is ripe for the sowing of the seed of desire for travel to Latin America. * * * No time could be more propitious for securing his interest in the possibilities of Latin American travel."

Keys to Marseilles, Napoleon Gift, Stolen

Marseilles, France, May 7 (A.P.).—Here's a warning to all kings, international bankers, world's heavyweight champions and Hollywood contest winners—

Keep away from Marseilles!

Not but what it isn't a nice town. It is, but the official handshakers are all upset.

Some one has pinched the keys to the city and leading citizens are running around in circles saying "sut alors" which means, approximately, "heck, and then some."

And to make it worse the keys were historical, made of silver some 70 years ago, and were first presented to Napoleon III. They vanished from the museum of the Parc Borely.

Alfonso Loses Tooth

Paris, May 7 (A.P.).—Former King Alfonso's toothache, which kept him from a banquet given here by Spanish royalists, was cured by two American dentists.

The former king phoned the dental clinic at the American Hospital in Neuilly, made an appointment and showed up for the tooth pulling with all the customary courage of the Bourbons.

CAMP IS ARRANGED FOR COLORED BOYS

Site in Shenandoah National Park to Be Used by Them.

Aided by the United States Forest Service, colored boys of the Nation's Capital have been accorded a permanent camp in the Shenandoah National Park, at a site 100 miles distant, and about ten miles below Luray Caverns, at the foot of the Massanutten Mountains, offering facilities for fishing and bathing. A carnival, for the purpose of providing permanent equipment for the camp, will be held, May 18 to 28, at Second and W streets northwest.

This equipment will include a dining hall shack, sanitary devices and floors, approximating a cost of $3,000. Various organizations which have engaged in promotion of a summer camp for colored boys, have united the efforts toward development of the Shenandoah camp.

A committee of citizens which agreed to merge activities last week consisted of Dr. C. Herbert Marshall, Maj. Campbell C. Johnson, Col. West A. Hamilton, W. L. Tancil, Lee W. Johnson, Robert McGraw, John W. Carter, Joseph Walker, Ray A. Clarke, Z. F. Ramsaur, A. O. Waller, Linn C. Drake, D. E. Tancil, Emory B. Smith, Douglass Dyson, Jeremiah &. Adams, James W. The carnival committee has arranged as one of its features a poll, in which opportunity will be given the public to express its sentiment in support of a united proposition for a camp for colored boys. Boys will be given the opportunity, at the carnival, to earn a week's vacation free at the camp.

PARLEY OPENS SOON OF MASONIC CLUBS

300 Capital Committeemen Arrange for Sessions of League This Week.

One of the important events which will occur during Masonic Week of the George Washington Bicentennial celebration, will be the twenty-seventh annual convention of the National League of Masonic Clubs, at the Willard Hotel, beginning next Wednesday and ending Saturday.

The National League of Masonic Clubs is an organization composed of over 600 clubs throughout the United States and several foreign countries with over 250,000 members. The organization is now conducting a campaign for a quarter of a million dollars for their educational foundation, to be used in the establishment of a school of foreign service at George Washington University of this city. This school of foreign service is a department of the school of government of that university and has been in operation for three years.

Although the convention does not officially open until Wednesday, the national officers and the delegates then in the city, accompanied by a military escort, will journey to Arlington National Cemetery on Tuesday at 4 p. m., and lay a wreath on the tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

Wednesday will be devoted to opening ceremonies and general business, while Thursday the delegates will take part in the dedication of the George Washington Masonic National Memorial at Alexandria. Wednesday evening will be occupied with the reception and ball in honor of the officers and delegates, given by the Circle Club of Master Masons of Washington.

Friday morning will include the inspirational hour of the convention, an annual feature, when reports are received on the progress of the educational foundation. In the afternoon, a memorial stone will be laid at the Washington Cathedral, and the evening will be given over to the banquet tendered the retiring president of the league.

The final session of the convention will be held in the new memorial in Alexandria on Saturday morning.

The committee in charge of the convention is composed of Maj. Gen. Amos A. Fries, general chairman; H F. Chandler and D. D. Isbell associate chairmen; Edward E. Berney, general secretary and E. J. Skidmore, treasurer, all of Washington. They are assisted by a local committee of over 300.

The officials of the National League are Walter T. Tidswell, president, Detroit, Mich.; Melville D. Hensey, first vice president, Washington D. C.; Roy W. Price, second vice president, West Haven, Conn.; Louis Walter, third vice president, Freeport, N. Y.; Arthur B. Eaton, secretary-treasurer, Philadelphia; Mort L. O'Connell, national director, Oradell, N. J.; and William T. Ramsey, national director, Chester, Pa.

Genes Are Likely to Play Havoc With Fortune Telling

Fortune tellers of the future will not gaze into crystal globes nor will they seek their knowledge from the stars.

Prophecy will not be conducted in mystic parlors of clairvoyance but in the light of the scientist's laboratory.

Horoscopes will be plotted not from the zodiac or the palm, but from a single cell of the subject's body.

The sages of prophecy will be scientists, not seers of mysticism, and they will consult the man himself for his future, which is spun, not by Fate, but by heredity's trace within each cell of his body.

There may be a time when all the physical attributes of a person may be told from an examination of the genes in a single cell of his body at babyhood.

The gene which carries the characteristic of races and of individuals through countless generations was discovered recently by Dr. John Belling, cytologist, of the Carnegie Institution of Washington.

Like many other famed scientific searches, the discovery of the gene was preceded by an assumption of its existence.

A hundred years ago chemists guessed the existence of the atom and later proved their assumption, so biologists had thought that genes existed and that they were responsible for the hereditary traits of living things.

Dr. Belling found the genes—the ultimate physical units of heredity—in the cells of the lily. He has counted them, photographed them and observed somewhat of their behavior.

Working with most painstaking care, he succeeded in so staining the cells that under extremely high magnification the genes were visible.

How the gene effects the individual has been proven by experiments in breeding the fruit fly. This work was begun by Prof. T. H. Morgan, of Columbia University, and continued by him and his students, supplemented by investigations in other institutions.

By breeding, literally, millions of pedigreed flies and observing the results, Prof. Morgan and his coworkers have been able to identify the genes responsible for many of the characters which appear in the adult flies.

It was once thought that every character in the adult was due to a particular and corresponding gene. It was believed, for example, that there was a particular gene which determined the color of the eye, another which was responsible for the shape of the head, &c.

The fruit fly experiments proved this theory untenable. It was learned that the color of the fly's eye was determined, not by a single gene, but by the cooperative action of a troop of nearly 50.

HURLEY CITES DAYS AS G. W. U. STUDENT

Justice Proctor Introduces Secretary of War at Alumni Dinner.

The Secretary of War, Patrick J. Hurley, was guest of honor and speaker at the George Washington University alumni luncheon yesterday at the Mayflower Hotel.

Mr. Hurley was introduced by Justice James M. Proctor, president of the association, as "one of the sons of the university who has taken his place in the highest councils of the Nation."

In his talk to the alumni Mr. Hurley combined informal reminiscences concerning his student days in the law school and a tribute to George Washington, asserting that "one of the things we have to be proud of is that our school is named for the father of our country. Today, we as Americans, are confronted with a challenge that calls for the spirit of Washington."

Justice Proctor introduced those seated at the head table, including Chief Justice Wheat, Harry C. Davis and Stephen E. Kramer, of the board of trustees of the university; Henry Grattan Doyle, dean of the junior college; Dr. Frank A. Hornaday, past president of the alumni association, and Matthew O'Brien, of the executive committee.

A group of solos was given by Dr. Preston Haynes, accompanied by Grace Ruble Harmon.

Anacostia Flats Tilled as Gardens

Employment Agencies Use Plot in "Back-to-Land" Movement.

With the cooperation of the United States Department of Agriculture and the various organizations of the Community Chest, the joint garden committee of the Council of Social Agencies and the District of Columbia Committee on Employment has started a "back to the land" movement. The committee is composed of Mrs. Frederick Brooke, chairman; E. H. Daniels, Gen. B. F. Cheatham, Rev. Laurence J. Shehan, Miss Margaret C. Lancaster, Paul L. Benjamin and Miss Mary Edith Coulson.

W. B. Davy, of the Department of Agriculture, was instrumental in having the Government furnish land in Anacostia flats, on Benning road, for white gardeners and also a plot across the river for colored gardens. The employment committee is clearing the land and plowing it and the chest agencies are furnishing seeds and families to work the gardens.

Gardens already have been planted by fifteen white families, Miss Coulson, secretary, said yesterday, and by tomorrow there will have been prepared garden plots for 40 colored workers.

ROTARIANS ARRIVING FOR 1932 MEETING

Three-Day Convention to Open Today; First Lady to Greet Women.

Service above self as an antidote for the economic situation will be the keynote of the thirty-fourth district convention of Rotary International, delegates to which today are pouring into Washington for the three-day conference at the Willard Hotel. The Washington Rotary Club, led by President S. Percy Thompson and Convention Chairman George Whitwell, will act as hosts; and District Gov. Paul E. Titsworth will preside.

The arriving delegates will register this morning at the Rotary "House of Friendship" in the Willard. During the day there will be a golf tournament for the men. The visiting women will be entertained in the afternoon by the wives of Washington Rotary Club members. A special religious service will be held in the evening at Epiphany Church with Bishop James E. Freeman officating.

The first general session of the convention will be called to order tomorrow morning, when the district governor's annual report will be presented. The principal address will be by Canon William Thompson Elliott, Vicar of Leeds, England, whose subject will be "Individual Loyalities of a Rotarian." There will be separate luncheons for the men, at the Willard, and for the women, at the Mayflower. The Rev. Allan A. Stockdale will address the men's luncheon.

On tomorrow afternoon the women will go on a trip to Mount Vernon while the men are attending the group meetings on international, vocational and community service. The day's round of events will culminate in the governor's ball to be held in the evening at the Willard.

The third day will open with an early morning breakfast for the present and incoming presidents of the Rotary Clubs in the Thirty-fourth Districts. The sessions will start at 9 o'clock and the first address will be by John Nelson, of Canada, third vice president of Rotary International, his subject being "The Increasing Purpose of Rotary." Leland D. Case will talk on "Our Periscope, the Rotarian," and Huston Thompson will discuss "Boy's Work." The director of the Washington Community Chest, Elwood Street, will deliver a talk on "Community Service." The morning session will close with the election of the District governor for the next term.

The women at the convention will be received by Mrs. Hoover at noon at the White House, after which they will motor to the Congressional Country Club for luncheon and bridge. The men will lunch at the Willard and hear an address by William N. Doak, Secretary of Labor, with entertainment furnished by George O'Connor and Matt Horne.

The final session will take place on Tuesday afternoon. After the awarding of the trophies in Sunday's golf tournament, the meeting will be addressed by Robert Lincoln O'Brien, president of the United States Tariff Commission. The afternoon meeting will be followed by a dinner at the Willard. The convention will close with a reception at new National Museum, and an opportunity to see the Bicentennial exhibit on the planning of the National Capital.

Wood Pulp Now Being Used In Installation of Cables

A new use for wood fiber pulp has recently been discovered by telephone engineers. After years of research and experiment a method of applying the fiber to copper wires for installation in cables in place of the paper ribbon which has been in use for 40 years, has been developed, resulting in a better standard of installation and promising a substantial saving in the cost of manufacturing.

The satisfactory insulating of fine wires with wood fibers applied directly to the wires in the form of pulp has been the objective of ten years of intensive scientific study, according to a statement of John A. Remon, general manager of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co.

The new method is to imbed each wire in the ribbon of pulp and to turn this ribbon down into a cylindrical sheath while still wet, taking advantage wherever possible of methods and equipment used in paper making. Naturally, such a radical departure from the existing methods of cable manufacture has made necessary a development of much new equipment. The Western Electric Co. has already completed the installation of pulp-applying equipment in its cable plant and millions of feet of wire are now daily being insulated with pulp, fabricated into cables and put in service in the telephone plant.

The new pulp-insulated cable is being used, said Mr. Remon, in practically all of the exchange cable construction work now being carried on in Washington.

Morgan, and will include a reading by Mrs. Elizabeth Vivian. George A. Maddux, president of the board of directors of the home will deliver the speech of acceptance. Jewish Soviet Republic To Be Subject Tonight

Prof. Charles Koontz, recently returned from an extensive tour of Biro-Bidjan, will give a lecture on the "Jewish Socialist Soviet Republic" tonight at the Typographical Temple, 419 G street northwest at 8:30 o'clock.

Prof. Koontz said that the republic is being established in Biro-Bidjan which is several times the size of Palestine. It is located on the Amur River in Siberia. He said also that within a short time there will be enough Jewish people in the community to establish a republic such as there already exists for other nationalities. The work is being carried on in line with the policy of the Soviet government concerning self determination of small nationalities, Prof. Koontz said.

WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, MAY 8, 1932.

HONOR TO MOTHERS WILL BE PAID TODAY IN CITY-WIDE RITES

Tree in Honor of Unknown Soldier's Parent to Be Set Near Tomb.

SERVICE AT CATHEDRAL WILL RENDER HOMAGE

Masons to Hold Exercises Appropriate to Day in Sylvan Theater.

Mother—be she Judy O'Grady or the colonel's lady—today is to receive the tribute of the Nation, with this city and its environs joining widely in paying homage.

Outstanding and significant of Mother's Day exercises here will be the planting of a white birch tree in Arlington Cemetery in honor of the mother of the Unknown Soldier. The white birch—symbolic Mother's Day tree—will be planted near the sepulchre of the nameless hero.

The ceremony at Arlington will begin at 10:30 a. m. The address of dedication will be delivered by Assistant Secretary of War Frederick H. Payne. Mme. Ernestine Schumann-Heink, famous opera contralto, will sing "Danny Boy" and "Taps."

Noted Spade to Be Used.

The famous "Mother's Tree Spade" of the American Forestry Association will be used in the planting at Arlington. It has been used in many notable Mother's Tree plantings and was employed in turning the earth for the first tree ever planted to honor motherhood—at Reading, Pa., in 1923.

At 4 o'clock in the afternoon a patriotic Mother's Day celebration is to be held in tribute to the memory of Mary Ball Washington, mother of the first President, in the spacious choir and sanctuary of the Washington Cathedral, Mount St. Alban. This ceremony will be under the auspices of the District of Columbia Bicentennial Commission.

The Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, will preach at the Cathedral service. Mrs. John D. Sherman, a member of the National Bicentennial Commission and former president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, will read a tribute to the life of Mary Ball Washington.

A notable group of Cabinet members, senators and representatives, and others prominent from many walks of life, are expected to attend the Cathedral exercises. The majority of the block of 1,500 seats in the choir will be open to the public. Clergymen from other Protestant and Jewish congregations will assist at the service and music will be provided by the Cathedral Choir and the United States Marine Band.

Masonic Service Set.

Many churches throughout the city will have special Mother's Day services today. Civic and fraternal groups have also arranged ceremonies in observance of the occasion.

A Mother's Day service will be held under auspices of Kallipolis Grotto at 9:15 a. m. at the Sylvan Theater on the Monument Grounds, opening the ceremonies for the week to be staged by the Grotto and the Grand Lodge of Masons during Bicentennial Masonic week. Dr. Joseph Sizoo will preach at the Sylvan Theater ceremonies, assisted by the Rev. Dr. William Abernethy and the Rev. Dr. Hugh Stevenson. The Grotto Band will give a concert.

The West Virginia Society of the District of Columbia will sponsor a Mother's Day celebration at 3 p. m. at Calvary Baptist Church, Eighth and H streets northwest. Miss Ann Jarvis, a native of Taylor County, W. Va., will be honor guest.

Judge Parker Confers With Hoover Secretary

(Associated Press.)

Federal Judge John J. Parker, of North Carolina, whose nomination to the bench of the United States Supreme Court was rejected by the Senate, yesterday paid a call at the White House. Judge Parker talked with Walter H. Newton, one of the President's secretaries, but did not see Mr. Hoover. Judge Parker declined to comment in any way upon his visit.

The North Carolina judge was the center of a bitter Senate fight after his name had been submitted by President Hoover. Labor organizations charged he had militated against them. He is a strong Republican in the Tarheel State.

Henry Ford Checks On Ancient Clock

Finds Timepiece at Kenmore One Second Slow After 200 Years.

Fredericksburg, Va., May 7 (A.P.).—The custodian told Henry Ford that the old grandfather's clock at Kenmore, the home of Washington's sister, keeps good time.

"How good?" asked Mr. Ford, who, with Mrs. Ford, was touring Virginia gardens.

"Oh, it has always kept good time," the custodian said. "It was Washington's mother's clock, and George Washington learned to tell time by it. It is 200 years old or more, and it still keeps good time."

"Two hundred years, and keeps good time," mused Mr. Ford. "Well, we'll see."

He took out his watch and looked at it for a few moments.

With a broad grin, as though he had something on the custodian, he emphatically said:

"It's slow."

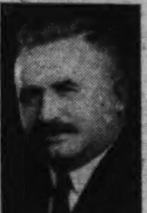
"Slow?" questioned the amazed custodian.

"Yes," smiled Mr. Ford, "one second."

CAPITAL ECHOES

By EDWARD T. FOLLIARD.

Wall Street Wolves, Texas Steers, and Cerise Whiskers.



Senator Norbeck.

THOSE who are saying that the Senate's investigation of the New York Stock Exchange is a flop, have failed to consider the political angle.

Take the case of Senator Peter Norbeck (Republican), of South Dakota, who, as chairman of the banking committee has been in charge of the "Wall street probe." Mr. Norbeck was born on a farm, and before entering politics, was a well driller.

The average citizen out in Mr. Norbeck's State knows as much about the stock market as I do, which is nothing. The South Dakotan, however, has from childhood been taught that Wall street is a civic curse, a traditional enemy of the farmer. He does not think in terms of "bulls," "bears," or "lambs." In his view, Wall street harbors only one species—"wolves."

Thus it was that Norbeck, catapulted into the limelight by the stock exchange investigation, became a hero out in South Dakota. Yes, sir, old Pete Norbeck had his dander up, and he was out to slay those wolves.

Last week there was a primary election in South Dakota. When the votes were counted, it was seen that Norbeck had been nominated for another term by an overwhelming majority. He carried every county, and polled four votes to every one for his rival.

* * * *

Norbeck would have won anyway, but there is no doubt that the wolves of Wall street had something to do with it.

They do things in a big way down in the Texas Panhandle country. A quarter of a century ago, Bascom Timmons used to be a cowboy down there. Now he is a well-known Washington correspondent, representing a large string of newspapers. When he was elected recently as president of the National Press Club, the Texas cattlemen thought they ought to do something for him.

What they have now decided to do has just about taken Timmons' breath away. They have decided to give a barbecue in his honor and, accordingly, they are sending 30 Texas steers to Washington. Yes, 30, and all of them big, fat Herefords.

Along with the steers will come John Snider, the "barbecue king" of the Southwest, whose job it will be to dig the pits and see to the roasting of the beeves. He is bringing here an old-fashioned chuck wagon, which, following the barbecue, will be offered the National Museum.

The barbecue will be given under the auspices of the National Press Club, and will take place at Chesapeake Beach the afternoon of May 21. Three thousand men are expected to attend, including members of Congress, diplomats, Government officials, and a number of other celebrities.

When Timmons protested against the magnitude of the Texas offer, the cattlemen bluntly told him that, conditions being what they are, they couldn't sell the steers anyway.

President Timmons expects to give some of the steers to charitable organizations here in Washington.

LIKE all other members of Congress, Representative Fred Britten, of Chicago, Ill., and Representative Charles L. Abernethy, of New Bern, N. C., are anxious to be reelected. Aside from that, the two men have but little in common. Britten is a Republican, Abernethy a Democrat, Britten a wet, Abernethy a dry.

In pursuance of their common desire—reelection—the two men recently decided to bombard the voters back home with some campaign literature.

Abernethy got up a resume of his record, including presumably his vigorous "No" vote against the Beck-

HISTORY TEACHERS SELECT OFFICERS

Middle States Unit Hears Lawrence Stress Value of Civic Courses.

Prof. Roy F. Nichols, of the University of Pennsylvania, was elected president of the Association of History Teachers of the Middle States and Maryland yesterday morning at a session of the twenty-ninth annual spring meeting which has been in progress since Friday under the auspices of The George Washington University.

Other officers elected were: Vice president, Prof. Frances Morehouse, of Hunter College, New York; secretary-treasurer, Miss Lena C. Van Bibber, of the Maryland State Normal School; elective members of the council, Miss Susanne B. Waters, of MacFarland Junior High School, Washington; Dr. Donald L. McMurry, of the commission on the social studies of the American Historical Association, for two years; Prof. J. Selwyn-Shapiro, of the College of the City of New York, and Miss Alice N. Gibbons, of the Rochester High School, for one year.

At the closing session, devoted to "Phases of Recent American History," Prof. John W. Oliver, of the University of Pittsburgh, presented a paper on "Technology and the New History," and Prof. Nelson P. Mead, of the College of the City of New York, discussed "American Traditions and World Realities." Round table discussion was led by Prof. Samuel Flagg Bemis, executive officer of the History Department of the George Washington University.

David Lawrence Is Speaker.

David Lawrence, editor of the United States Daily, was the speaker at the luncheon tendered to members of the association by the university.

"If a community is to be wisely and justly governed," he said, "the leaders of thought and action must regard citizenship as one of their natural obligations and their interest in the affairs of State must be honest, disinterested and unselfish.

"What are we doing to equip our citizens with the knowledge that makes leadership?" he asked; "we are turning out of high schools and colleges a million or more students every year, but unfortunately, through no fault of the schools, we have failed to create either a familiarity or an interest in government on their part.

"Teaching has improved greatly in the last ten years. There are many scattered but sincere and persistent efforts toward emphasizing a training in citizenship, but as yet the understanding of government is not imbedded in the consciousness of the youth of America.

Need for Change Seen.

"Now if we could turn out annually 25,000 young men and young women whose interest in the subject of government, the affairs of their municipalities, their State and their Nation was sufficient to qualify them for informed leadership, we could surely change the whole conception of government.

"I have accepted the national chairmanship of the United States Society because I believe with countless others, that we can do no greater thing for the youth of our country today than to prepare them for citizenship and the responsibilities of government.

"We are seeking nowadays an enlightened nationalism. Its first prerequisite is knowledge and, above all, an intelligent leadership which can translate that knowledge into intelligent action. We are not building for a month or a year, but for the future of a wonderful country which has given us the greatest opportunity of all peoples for service to our fellow man."

NEW LAWS DRAFTED TO HELP RAILROADS

House Committee Proposes to Let Lines Retain Excess Earnings.

(Associated Press.)

Drastic changes in transportation laws were proposed yesterday by the House commerce committee as necessary to help railroads recover from the economic doldrums.

The committee put together and formally reported two bills by its chairman, Representative Rayburn (Democrat), Texas. One would repeal the law requiring carriers to give to the Government half of their earnings above 5¾ per cent. This would relieve roads of the possible necessity of paying $360,000,000 to the Government.

The other measure—drafted after a special study made of orders from the House—would put holding companies under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Two minority reports were submitted, however, one opposing each of the two major phases of the bill. The recapture minority report was signed by Representatives Hoch, of Kansas; Burtness, of North Dakota; Nelson, of Maine; Robinson, of Iowa, and Garber, of Oklahoma, Republicans. The second, on holding companies, was agreed to by Representatives Beck, of Pennsylvania; Cooper, of Ohio; Wyant, of Pennsylvania, Republicans, and Igoe, of Illinois, Democrat.

In the majority report the committee said the commission's consolidation plan in some instances was being threatened by holding company ownership of railroad stock. The new measure would let the commission supervise holding companies and prevent the voting of stock if it was shown to have been used contrary to the public interest.

"The important point is that unifications and groupings of railroads have been accomplished entirely without supervision by the commission and without any opportunity to consider the question of public interest," the report said.

But the minority group held there had been no facts presented to show "that these holding companies have been prejudicial to any legitimate railroad interests."

"We are indisposed to grant further powers to the greatest of all governmental bureaus unless the advantage to the public is reasonably clear," it continued. "Control of mere ownership of stock is not a regulation of commerce within the meaning of the Constitution."

5 Leading Progressives Offer to Aid Brookhart

Des Moines, May 7 (A.P.).—Five congressional progressives have volunteered their services and may take part in Senator Smith W. Brookhart's campaign for renomination in Iowa, Brookhart's headquarters announced today.

Headed by Representative Fiorello H. LaGuardia, of New York, and including such leaders as Senators George W. Norris, of Nebraska; Peter Norbeck, of South Dakota; Gerald P. Nye, of North Dakota, and Robert M. LaFollette, of Wisconsin, the group probably will swing into action in the two weeks before the June 6 primary.

Hoover Signs Annapolis Order.

(Associated Press.)

President Hoover yesterday provided for enlarging the personnel of the Navy by as many men as will be graduated from the Naval Academy this year, signing an act providing for the appointment as ensigns in the line of all midshipmen graduating.

REPLICA OF PAYNE'S CHURCH TO BE BUILT IN FAIRFAX COUNTY

Original Edifice Was Erected Before Revolution Near Courthouse Site.

STRUCTURE WAS RAZED BY SOLDIERS IN 1862

Episcopalian Rector Leads in Search for Colonial Plans of Architecture.

By DAVID RANKIN BARBEE.

Fairfax Courthouse is beginning to take note of the fact that it has a great history; and it wants the world to know it. Truly it has a disguished name, for the Fairfax name is one of the most illustrious in the annals of England as well as of the Old Dominion. The Courthouse itself dates no further back, so I am told, than the year 1800; but long before that it was an important point on the Ox road, where Col. George Washington was wont to foregather with his neighbors on the then frontier and "swap lies" about fox hunting and tobacco crops and the new vintage of corn liquor and King George.

In this quiet but cultured little village one finds many of the foottracks of the great Virginian; and in its courthouse one also finds his will and that of Dame Martha and probably some other papers that by rights should be in a safer place—say the Library of Congress. Why could not Fairfax Courthouse be satisfied with photostats of the originals? Yes, why? Ask Walton Moore and hear him roar.

Of these minor things, however, this feeble pen will not sing on this quiet Sabbath day. For Fairfax Courthouse is thinking more about another and a greater memorial of Father George than his will, and is planning another temple to keep alive his memory as a true and loyal son of the Most High God.

Was Good Churchman.

We ordinary people think of Washington as soldier and statesman, as farmer and fox hunter, as lover and gallant, as friend and fireside companion. In those phases of his life we find the highest expression of nobility. But there was another phase of that remarkable life in which the humblest of us could meet him on common ground and in which he was no greater than a little child. "Except ye become as a little child," so the Scripture reads, and so we so often forget that it so reads.

Washington was both a good Churchman and a good Christian. It is not often that both are blended in the same man. And this is the thing in his life that some of the good people of Fairfax Courthouse are going to herald to the world in a work they are now contemplating and soon will put into effect.

In that very human book, the diary of George Washington, we find an entry for September 9, 1768, which reads: "Proceeded (from Alexandria) to the meeting of our Vestry at the new Church (Payne's) and lodged at Capt. Edward Payne's."

Should you ask the average antiquarian of Virginia where Payne's Church was, he would stare at you. If he were an Episcopalian or a Methodist, he would probably think you were speaking of some Methodist Chapel named for the great Methodist Bishop Robert Paine. There is a dissimilarity between the two names, but that is peculiar to Virginia, where, I am told, correct spelling is not considered a virtue or an elegant accomplishment.

Episcopal Church.

This Payne's Church never was a Methodist Chapel; it always was an Episcopal Church, and it took its name from that Capt. Edward Payne with whom Col. Washington was wont "to lie"—that is, to be an overnight guest—when he went up there from Mount Vernon to attend a meeting of the vestry.

So far as we have any records, Payne's Church was completed in the year 1768, having been two and a half years building. It was a brick church, the first brick church in old Truro Parish; its antecedent sister churches in the parish having first been built of wood and some of them

MANY WORLD WAR CAMP SITES BEING USED TO TRAIN MEN

Army Holds 16 of 32 Areas for "Preparedness" Purposes.

SEVERAL ARE UTILIZED BY INDUSTRIAL PLANTS

Meade Being Completed as Fort, Part of Name of Those Retained.

By THOMAS M. CAHILL.

Fourteen years after they were set apart to train men "to end war," finds half of the 32 World War training camp sites of the United States Army still held for martial or "preparedness" purposes and 16 of these fields won for peace.

In nine of the first-named category, the thought of national defense seems intrenched firmly. First among these is Camp Devens, near Ayer, Mass., now known as Fort Devens, "fort" being the War Department's appellation signifying a permanent military post. This was completed last year for a Regular Army garrison and will also serve as a training center for the New England National Guard and Citizens' Military Training Corps.

Dix, near Wrightstown, N. J., is held for summer training of the Regular Army and Citizens' Military Training Corps of New York, New Jersey and Delaware. Doniphan and Funston were located, respectively, on the Fort Sill, Okla., and Fort Riley, Kans., reservations and fall naturally within this classification, as does Travis, now a part of Fort Sam Houston, Tex.

Meade, near Annapolis Junction, Md., is being completed as a permanent Regular Army station, as is Lewis, near American Lake, Wash. McClellan, near Anniston, Ala., has been retained as a training center for Coast Artillery, and Kearny, near San Diego, Calif., is now being used as an auxiliary flying field by the United States Navy.

"War Ideas" Zone.

There are six camp sites in which the war ideas still command a "zone of influence." These are Jackson, Columbia, S. C.; Custer, Battle Creek, Mich.; Grant, Rockford, Ill.; Dodge, Des Moines, Iowa; Beauregard, Alexandria, La., and Pike, Little Rock, Ark., still used for the training of National Guard or Citizen's Military Training Corps. Oddly enough, at Sherman, Chillicothe, Ohio, training ground for five wars, the militant theories have only a meager foothold, a rifle range for State troops.

Of the 16 camp sites won for peace, seven are now residential subdivisions. These are Taylor, near Louisville, Ky.; Greene, near Charlotte, N. C.; Hancock, near Augusta, Ga.; MacArthur, near Waco, Tex.; Bowie, near Fort Worth, Tex.; Sheridan, near Montgomery, Ala., and Fremont, Palo Alto, Calif.

Now about the remaining positions in the peace alignment. On the land occupied by Camp Wadsworth, near Spartanburg, S. C., some of the remaining buildings are used for warehouses and storage and there are a number of poultry farms and dairies.

Status of Southern Camps.

Camp Logan, within the city limits of Houston, Tex., has been turned into a public park. Camp Sevier, near Greenville, S. C., is now under cultivation, although there are several diversified industrial plants on the site. Camp Wheeler, near Macon, Ga., is unoccupied, except by a few farms and a fruit cannery. Most of Camp Gordon, near Atlanta, is occupied by small farms, although some of the property with railroad frontage is used for warehousing purposes. The hospital unit, all that is left of Camp Cody, near Deming, N. Mex., has been purchased by the Sisters of the Holy Cross. They have modernized the unit, making it one of the largest and best equipped sanatoriums in the country.

Aside from a school about where the park of the Fourth Field Artillery was located, there are no buildings standing on the Camp Shelby site, near Hattiesburg, Miss. Camp Upton, near Yaphank, Long Island,

Tepee of Lewis and Clark To Be Used in Spring Fete

Historic Elkhide Once More to Reecho Tom-Toms at Lewiston as Ancient Ka-Ou-It Is Revived at Cherry Blossom Festival.

Lewiston, Idaho, May 6 (A.P.).—Handed down from generation to generation by proud Indian possessors, a buckskin tepee which sheltered Lewis and Clark during their historic exploration expedition of 1803-4 again will be erected on the banks of the Clearwater River during the annual cherry blossom festival and ka-ou-it here, May 13-14.

Once more the ancient elkhide of the tepee will vibrate to the weird beating of tom-toms; the steady, rhythmic chant of old chieftains and squaws and the fierce yells of the dancing young bucks as the Indians from reservations all over the Pacific Northwest gather to celebrate the return of spring.

"Ka-ou-it" is a Nez Perce word meaning "eaten for the first time." When the camas blossomed and the silvery salmon again ran the rivers, tribes from far and near gathered in this sheltered valley of Tsceminicum (the meeting place) every year for their spring thanksgiving, until the encroachment of the pale faces drove the red men back toward the mountains and the ka-ou-it finally was abandoned.

Now it has been revived and combined with the Cherry Blossom Festival of the white men. This year the tribes will erect a tepee village on the edge of Lewiston's business district and will reenact the traditional ka-ou-it feast with root porridge and freshly speared salmon as the principal items on the menue.

The Lewis and Clark tepee is owned by Noah McFarland, Nez Perce Indian of Lapwai, Idaho, whose great-great-grandfater, Chief Twisted-Hair, received it from the Indian guide attached to the explorers' expedition. Chief Twisted-Hair was friendly with the explorers and aided them to obtain supplies as they passed through the Clearwater Valley.

Noah McFarland keeps the tepee in her home at Lapawai and it is set up but once a year, at the Lewiston ka-ou-it. She rolls it in dry leaves and then wraps it up in cloth to protect it. It is in a remarkable state of preservation, although it naturally must be handled with care. It is believed to have been brought from Montana by the expedition. Noah says it came from "somewhere across the mountains."

Noah McFarland, incidentally, is a cousin of Dave McFarland, famous all-American half back football player at Carlisle.

Lewis Carroll's Alice, Now 80, Visits U. S.

Little English Miss for Whom Classic Grew Was His One Love.

By WILLARD ALLEN COLCORD.
(Author of "Animal Land" and "Wings and Paws).

The original Alice, who inspired Lewis Carroll to write "Alice in Wonderland" and who, in April, 1928, sold the original manuscript, given to her as a Christmas gift when but a child, for $75,000, is now in America, a new "wonderland," to celebrate, not only her own eightieth birthday, but the centenary of the birth of Lewis Carroll himself—the name the Rev. Charles L. Dodgson, professor of mathematics at Christ Church, Oxford, England, chose to take when, after earnest solicitation, he was persuaded to give his consent to the publication of a work which he wrote, with painstaking care, out of pure love and admiration for Alice, and never intended or had the slightest idea of its ever seeing daylight in print when he wrote it.

Accompanied by her son, Capt. Caryl Hargreaves, formerly of the Scots Guards, and her younger sister, Miss Rhoda Liddell, Mrs. Reginald G. Hargreaves, whose maiden name was Alice Liddell, arrived in New York on the Cunarder Berengaria, April 29. The celebration, under the auspices of Columbia University, New York City, had its focal day last Wednesday, Mrs. Hargreave's eightieth birthday, when she, with others, over a Nation-wide network of the National Broadcasting Co., spoke to a vast audience in the United States, Canada and her own people in England. Like the unexpected Christmas gift of 70 years ago, this must have been one of the most thrilling moments of her life, and a forcible reminder of the tender memories of the long ago.

As in the case with the Mary who had the little lamb, until recently,

TOTAL ECLIPSE DUE TO BLOT SUN AUG. 31

Last in U. S. Until 1970 Will Attract Thousands to New England.

New York, May 7 (A.P.).—An arrow-straight, black path of a total eclipse of the sun, 100 miles wide, will come down from the North Pole to cross New England at 3:30 p. m., August 31.

It will strike directly through one of the Nation's great vacation lands at the height of the season. For 1 minute and 30 seconds it will last, provided the weather is clear. Those who wish to take the gambling chance on this spectacle, the last of its kind in the United States until 1970, can obtain "front seats" by matching the astronomers.

Uncle Sam Now Missing.

Among the playgrounds of Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Vermont, where the total eclipse will pass, astronomers began a year ago a quiet location of sites. Now they are all selected and published.

The astronomical advice is free—the scientists wanting only their own reservations, which were made long ago for a score or more of expeditions from both New and Old Worlds. Even Soviet Russia is sending an official expedition. As this is written the only missing person at the party is Uncle Sam. No appropriation has been reported yet to permit the U. S. Naval Observatory to do its own home eclipse.

Unofficially the United States will have droves of astronomers, from many private observatories, some of them in planes.

Western Edge.

This eclipse begins west of the North Pole early August 31, and sweeps almost straight southward. Its course is down Hudson Bay, between Quebec and Montreal.

The center line—that is where the astronomers have made reservations—crosses the St. Lawrence River 10 miles east of Sorel; 3 miles east of Island Pond, Vt.; 1½ miles east of the summit of Mount Washington, N. H.; 2 miles west of Fryeburg, Me., and strikes the coast at Cape Por-

Communists Plan Convention May 28

Chicago, May 7 (A.P.).—The central committee of the Communist Party of America has issued a call for a national nomination convention in Chicago May 28 and 29.

William Z. Foster, who headed the Communist ticket in 1928, has been proposed by the central committee for the presidential nomination again this year, and the committee has recommended for vice presidential candidate James W. Ford, Negro Communist of Alabama. The announcement said from 1,000 to 1,500 delegates were expected to attend all sessions and that a special public meeting had been arranged for the night of May 28 in the Coliseum, with capacity for 15,000 spectators.

REDS' GRAIN DECREE GIVES SALE RIGHTS

Collectives and Individual Farms May Sell in Open Markets.

Moscow, May 7 (A.P.).—The most fundamental change in dealing with the Soviet agricultural problem since collectivization began in earnest in 1928 was decreed today by the council of peoples commissars and the central committee of the Communist party.

The decree alters the government's policy of grain collection, reducing appreciably the quotas assessed against collectives and individual farms. Its purpose is to encourage these groups to dispose of their surplus production in the open market.

The order was signed by V. M. Molotov, president of the council of peoples commissars, and Joseph Stalin, head of the Communist party.

New Inducements Held Out.

One of its effects will be to improve the supplies of grain for urban populations and apparently at the same time to enlarge the collectivized area by providing new inducements for holdout peasants to enter collective farms.

The new regulation, which increases the collection assessments against State farms in order to balance the scales, applies to the 1932 crop. It permits collectives and individual peasants to sell their surplus in the open market after January 31, 1933.

Although the decree does not mention prices specifically, it is presumed that fixed prices will be set for the sale of this surplus, thus preventing speculation, and that most of such trading will be done through established collective markets.

Progress Is listed

The change in policy was made possible, the decree said, by the great victory achieved by collective economy over the individual system through the widespread use of modern farming machinery, through improved agricultural technique and through the liquidation of the village kulak elementt. A kulak is a well-to-do peasant.

In support of this contention, the decree cites figures showing grain collections increased from 396,000,000 bushels in 1928 to 810,000,000 in 1930 and 840,000,000 in 1931.

The decree asserts that industrial development has created the possibilities for a large increase in manufactured goods to satisfy the needs of villages. This has been one of the government's chief problems because peasants have been unwilling to part with their grain without assurances that they would be able to buy necessary manufactured articles.

Mary Astor Sails for South Seas

Los Angeles, May 7 (A.P.)—Bearing Mary Astor, film actress, and her husband, Dr. Franklyn Thorpe, Hollywood physician, the 36-foot yacht Henrietta sailed today for a cruise of the South Seas. Prior to its return in August, the yacht will be put in at Honolulu harbor for the birth of an infant to the couple.

MOVES TO REVALUE SILVER LOOM AGAIN ON CONGRESS LISTS

Senator King to Ask Vote on $100,000 for Cost of World Parley.

LEADING BRITONS URGE IMMEDIATE CONFERENCE

Jones Sounds Hoover on Calling Meeting; Says Proposal Is Needed.

By HAROLD J. T. HORAN.

Prospects of an international silver parley, either to peg the price of the metal or revalorize it through specific legislation, will be opened up next week in several joint moves to be made in Congress. Senator William H. King (Democrat), of Utah, intends to ask immediate discussion on a resolution for the appropriation of $100,000 to call an international conference on the pale metal.

The State Department has heretofore taken the position that the United States would be ready to cooperate with any international gesture to improve the general economic condition.

However, the department is reluctant to take the initiative in this direction, but if the joint resolution of Senator King is approved, the necessary steps will probably be taken by this Government.

Britons Urge Move.

A strong move for such an international conference has come from England, where Sir Robert Horne, chairman of the Silver Association, and Sir Henri Deterding, head of the Royal Dutch-Shell Oil Co., are among the most active supporters of the conference. Senator King declared yesterday:

"I have been in correspondence with these English interests and they are unanimous in the necessity for calling the silver conference now."

Another development in the silver matter has come from Senator Carl Hayden, of Arizona, who introduced a joint resolution authorizing the President to accept from foreign governments, on their intergovernmental debts, silver at the rate of one and one half fine ounces for each dollar.

The recent increased strength in silver prices was explained in official circles, as due to three chief causes: speculation, the disturbed conditions of the Far East and the increased possibility of a restriction of the Indian output.

Interest in Silver.

Enormous interest in silver is due to the fact that nearly half the human race is either directly or indirectly dependent upon silver as a means of subsistence. The fact that silver is a byproduct in the mining of such metals as lead, copper and zinc makes restriction of production particularly difficult. The low price of the baser metals has acted in some degree to reduce the output of silver.

With India on a sterling basis, the only country of real importance remaining with the silver currency is China, which is kept from the gold standard by the backward condition of her people and by the traditional monetary system in use there. Senator King declared yesterday that on previous occasions when arrangements had been made for having China sponsor the silver parley, the State Department interposed an objection.

The total stock of silver in India is estimated at four and a half billion ounces. Since silver has declined approximately 34 cents an ounce since 1926, the theoretical loss to the Indian government has been approximately about $3,000,000,000.

Loss Falls on Farmers.

A part of this loss has been borne by the government itself, but the greater part of it has fallen on the poor farmers, who have invested their savings in silver ornaments or bullion.

The United States, Germany, France and Italy are virtually the only powerful countries still on the gold standard. France and the United States are estimated to control between them almost 70 per cent of the world's total supply of the yellow precious metal.

Assistant Secretary of State James Grafton Rogers has made an intensive study of the silver problem, and has found that this year's production of silver will be about $60,000,000. This amount could be bought up by the powers and retained in vaults pending an appreciation in the price of the metal. Such a move

Turpentine Expert Gets Science Prize

Mistake of Left-Handed Man Leads to Revenue of $10,000,000.

New York, May 7 (A.P.).—Dr. Charles H. Herty, scientist, who turned the mistake of a left-handed Negro into $10,000,000 revenue for the American turpentine industry, received the medal of the American Institute of Chemists tonight.

The left-handed Negro by mistake picked up a right-handed ax to gash some pine trees under Dr. Herty's observation. An ax is left or right handed according to the side on which the cutting edge is ground. The mistake produced a cut slightly different from the one intended. In this small difference Dr. Herty discovered a method to make pines yield more turpentine. When he told the ax anecdote to a trade convention the executives of turpentine laughed, for Dr. Henry then was not so well known.

At present Dr. Herty is conducting an experimental plant at Savannah, Ga., to show that news print and fine grades of white paper can be manufactured from Southern pines heretofore considered worthless for any except cruder grades.

WASHINGTON VISION THEME OF PAGEANT

600 Persons Will Appear in Eastern Star Production Friday.

The Order of the Eastern Star pageant, "Washington's Vision of a Triumphant Nation," to be presented by the Bicentennial committee of the order next Friday night in the Washington auditorium, will draw grand matrons and grand patrons from Eastern Star chapters throughout the United States, it is announced by Mrs. Selma Klein, author and director of the pageant. The pageant, which is being given as an entertainment feature in the Masonic Week program, beginning tomorrow, is an elaborate 11-scene presentation including a cast of 600 people.

Approximately 6,000 tickets have been distributed for the presentation, and invitations issued to more than 1,000 distinguished guests. Mrs. Leila Cook, chairman of the ticket committee, is in charge of the ticket distribution.

Among those who have announced their intention of being present for the entertainment are Senators Morris Sheppard, Tom Connally and Gerald P. Nye, Representatives Samuel S. Arentz, C. G. Selvig, M. C. Tarver, George A. Welsh, J. Mitchell Chase, Earl C. Michener, Clark Burdick, Charles D. Millard, John W. Summers, Robert Luce, Charles L. Underhill, A. Piatt Andrew, John C. Schafer, Sol Bloom, John W. Moore, Joseph J. Manlove, Fred S. Purnell, Joseph L. Smith, U. S. Guyer, Peter A. Cavicchia, A. L. Bulwinkle, John T. Buckbee and Wall Doxey; President Cloyd H. Marvin of George Washington University; Dr. Luther H. Reichelderfer, president Board of Commissioners, District of Columbia; other prominent Washington citizens, and Eastern Star officials from Virginia, Maryland, Wyoming, Connecticut, New Jersey, and North Dakota.

A full-dress rehearsal of the cast will take place Friday at 1:30 p. m. at the Auditorium, Mrs. Klein announced.

Added attractions at the presentation will be a program by the United States Marine Band and a detachment of soldiers, sailors, and marines for the grand finale.

Akron Due to Start Coast Flight Today

Rosendahl Will Command Giant Airship on Trip Across Country.

Lakehurst, N. J., May 7 (A.P.).—The Navy dirigible Akron at sunrise tomorrow will start her flight to the Pacific Coast unless weather conditions are too unfavorable. Zero hour is set for 4 a. m. (Eastern standard time), Lieut. Comdr. Charles E. Rosendahl said today.

The ship, the exact route of which will depend on weather conditions, will head in the general direction of the Southwest. She probably will cross the Rocky Mountains west of El Paso, Tex., at an altitude of 6,500 feet. There will be 64 men in the crew, 14 officers in addition to Commander Rosendahl, and two naval officers as passengers.

Progress of the flight will be messaged twice daily to the Navy Department at Washington. On arrival, the Akron will report to the admiral of the Pacific fleet. The smaller aircraft, Los Angeles, will start south on a training flight Monday. Her itinerary has not been announced.

WORLD WAR CAMP SITES STILL IN USE

N. Y., was offered for sale in March, but only one bid was received, and that being below appraised value, was rejected. The eventual owner will obtain all the camp except a rifle range held for the Navy. Part of Camp Lee, near Petersburg, Va., has been made a portion of a national park; part is a bird and game refuge, and part will be the site of a Federal reformatory.

In the recital of this symbolic war and peace clash, however, the reader must not be confused as to the actual official status of the camp lands. Fifteen of them have been disposed of by the Army. Fourteen of these were on leased land and of the National Guard group, in which there were sixteen. The only ones in this division retained were Doniphan, part of Fort Sill and McClellan, now a permanent military post, Kearney later becoming destined for naval use.

National Army Camps.

Of sixteen National Army camps, Gordon and part of Taylor have been sold. Custer, Devens, Dix, Lewis, Meade, Travis and Funston are held for military purposes; Dodge is partly disposed of with the balance under Federal and State control; Grant, Pike and Jackson are under State control by revokable license; Sherman, turned over; Lee, about to be turned over to other Federal executive departments; Upton ready for the block.

The camps this article deals with are the 32 which were in a strictly military and historically accurate sense, training camps—those bearing the "training" designation and so officially regarded by the War Department. They must not be confused with the many centers of replacement, mobilization, specialized training, aviation, storage and transportation which, on a smaller scale, served a similar purpose.

They were created by General Orders No. 95, published July 18, 1917, by Secretary of War Newton D. Baker, signed by Maj. Gen. Tasker H. Bliss, acting chief of staff, and attested by H. P. McCain, the adjutant general. They were officially described as "cantonments for troops of the National Army and camps for troops of the National Guard." They were called "* * * in honor of the men named * * * who contributed during their lives to the development of the United States and the acquisition by American citizenship of its present status."

There were 4,000,000 men trained at these camps. Their total cost was more than $268,439,848.64 and their acreage, 343,508.15.

Teachers to Meet in Minneapolis.

(Associated Press.)

The department of superintendence of the National Education Association yesterday announced selection of Minneapolis for the sixty-third annual convention of the organization, February 25 to March 2, 1933. At its meeting for the current year here nearly 8,000 educators participated.

Two Young Brothers Here Have Plan to End Slump

Gilbert Gates, 25, with his 23-year-old brother, Bernard, who acts as his secretary. Between the two young men—who are cousins of Brig. Gen. Charles Gates Dawes, they have formulated a plan to end the depression.

Utilization of Patents Is Hub of Scheme Held by Dawes' Kin.

Serious-visaged, two young men of this city are laboring mightily these days and nights to perfect a plan which they are convinced will end forever economic unstability, put hundreds of thousands back to work and thus create purchasing power which will insure business health hereafter.

Young though they are, these planners are of a strain renowned for its business genius and political prowess. They are Gilbert Gates, 25, and Bernard Gates, 23, cousins of Brig. Gen. Charles Gates Dawes, former Vice President and Ambassador to Great Britain and now head of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The Gates boys live at 1521 Monroe street northeast with their mother and father and six other brothers. In the attic of their home they have rigged up a combination laboratory-den-office, and here they struggle with the complexities of the depression.

Gilbert, the elder of the pair that seeks further glory for the clan in the field of economic erudition, is an engineer for a great telegraph company and is possessed of considerable mechanical ability. He has perfected and patented several household appliances and is an authority on radio and its related branches.

The elder of the Gates brothers is credited by the younger with conceiving the plan they ardently claim to be the best they have heard yet. The young boy acts as secretary and "manager" for the elder.

Many hours spent browsing through patent journals and other records with regard to machine progress suggested their idea to the Gates boys.

They speak first, in discussing their plan, of the great number of factories running a few hours a day or entirely idle. The Gates point to the enormous machinery and property investment thus standing dormant.

Say the Gates brothers:

Let some specially created or present government agency be vested with funds to buy up leases on a number of produceable mechanical patents now available.

The patents would be selected for their adaptability to manufacture by factories now idle. All of the articles would be easily merchandisable, the youthful planners believe.

Great numbers of factory workers would thus be given employment, under the Gates plan. The merchandising, distribution, advertisement and other handling of the products would create still further employment, the brothers say, while the money thus brought into circulation would have a still further sympathetic effect on business conditions.

That in brief is the panacea put forward by these lads of the Gates-Dawes strain. The plan actually covers a number of typewritten pages and represents a considerable amount of research and thought by the brothers.

A number of legislators have been approached by the Gates brothers and have expressed interest in their project. Most of the legislators said they would consider the plan seriously at some future time. However, the time-inroads of a waning Congress and the approach of the political conventions and the subsequent busy campaigns have been reasons given the brothers against the consideration of their proposal at this time.

Determined, the brothers state that they will continue to haunt the halls of Congress and other governmental high places until their plan has been carefully examined. They are quite confident that such treatment would bring about its adoption.

Not without experience in legislative ways are the Gates brothers. Both served as pages in Congress. Bernard served in the Senate while his distinguished kinsman, Vice President Dawes, presided over that body. He later served in the House, where Gilbert worked, and studied at night for several years.

would undoubtedly do much to enhance the present value of the metal.

(Associated Press.)

The much-discussed question of an international silver conference echoed yesterday in the President's office, with a senatorial advocate of silver remonitization declaring himself afterward to be "satisfied" with the Chief Executive's stand.

Senator Jones (Republican), Washington—reporting he had discussed the silver problem with Mr. Hoover—said that although the President had not spoken flatly, he personally believed a concrete propsal for rehabilitating the metal, if brought to the White House, would result in invitations to an international parley.

There was no answering echo to this view from the Executive Mansion itself, however. Mr. Hoover remained silent. State Department officials also remained publicly cool to the subject.

Effect of Sounding Powers.

In one quarter close to the President the opinion was expressed that Mr. Hoover had not interested himself primarily in the question since sounding out various powers and finding them apathetic.

It was said later President Hoover is not very hopeful of an agreement on the proposal for rehabilitating silver, inasmuch as leading powers already have turned down suggestions for an international conference.

The President, it was added, would act if interest was shown by the powers most concerned in an agreeable recommendation.

Senator Jones, chairman of the Senate appropriations committee and a member of the finance committee, said he had raised the question with the Chief Executive because of the interest on the West Coast in the rehabilitation of silver.

"I feel satisfied, although the President didn't say so," said Senator Jones as he left the White House, "that if a concrete proposal were placed before him it would be submitted to the powers."

Asked if he had a concrete proposal for remonetizing silver, Senator Jones answered by recalling the widely publicized speech delivered in the Senate this week by Senator Borah of Idaho. Senator Borah stirred the question anew, declaring the rehabilitation of silver was one of the three pathways leading to economic recovery throughout the world.

The Washingtonian yesterday indicated a belief that Borah might be looked to for "the concrete proposal" needed. He said "Borah has given the matter a whole lot of study."

As a concluding sentence to his declaration of belief that Mr. Hoover would act if given something to act upon, Senator Jones said:

"We ought to submit something to the President"

Senator Borah would not be quoted on Jones' statement but he indicated that his suggestion for returning silver to the status it held before was a "concrete proposal."

Senator Borah contended in his speech to the Senate that since that time an effort had been made to force the gold standard on silver-using countries which had contributed to the maldistribution of gold.

On his return to the Capitol, Senator Jones was questioned about what he meant by a "concrete proposal."

He suggested that if the United States called an international conference to fix a ratio between gold and silver as a basis for international bimetallism it would be such a proposal.

Ratio May Wait.

It would not be necessary for this country, in calling a conference, Senator Jones said, to propose a definite ratio, such as 16 to 1 or 20 to 1, but that could be left to the conference.

Senator Jones explained he was not offering that as a suggestion for "concrete proposal," but merely explaining what he meant by that term.

"There ought not to be any hedging by those who favor restoring silver," Senator Jones said. "They ought to be willing to get together and offer something definite."

Chairman Pittman of the foreign relations subcommittee, which has been considering the silver problem for more than 2 years, said a concrete plan had been proposed in the resolution adopted by the Senate last year asking the President to call a conference.

"That proposition was," Pittman said, "that governments cease to melt up and debase silver coins and sell the metal as bullion. That is enough and every government in the world except India is ready to do it.

"The President asks a concrete proposal. It is there. This is all a dodge."

Raccoon Is Stowaway On Pullman to Buffalo

Buffalo, N. Y., May 7 (A.P.).—A stowaway arrived here today on the 4 a. m. Nickel Plate train from Chicago.

When the train pulled into the station, a raccoon crawled gingerly from some recess under a Pullman car, stretched, took one look at the people in the station and scrambled up a drain pipe to the roof of the train-shed. It stayed there until a representative of the Humane Society brought it down.

BIG RALLY TO START JEWRY RELIEF DRIVE

Volunteer Workers Gather Tomorrow to Launch $50,000 Campaign.

The $50,000 United Jewish campaign will be launched officially tomorrow night with a mass meeting of drive workers at the Jewish Community Center.

The drive will last nine days, closing with a banquet May 22 at the center. An effort to reach every Jewish family in Washington will be made by the 200 or more volunteer workers enrolled in the joint campaign.

Among the speakers at tomorrow night's rally will be the Rev. Louis J. Schwefel, former rabbi of the Adas Israel Congregation, who will come here from New York to address the workers. Other speakers will be Isidore Hershfield and Dr. Abram Simon, Louis E. Spiegler, Mrs. Charles Rosenthal and Morris Garfinkle.

Funds raised in the United Jewish campaign will be divided between the Jewish Homeland movement and Eastern European relief. Drives are being held throughout the United States at this time in behalf of these two causes in an effort to raise $5,000,000.

Only Drive This Year.

The local campaign is the only Jewish drive here this year and is participated in by the various Jewish organizations of the city, including the Council of Jewish Women, the Sisterhoods of the Eighth Street Temple and the Sixth Street Synagogue, the B'nai B'rith and others.

The time of totality varies on the center line from 1 minute 42 seconds near the St. Lawrence River, to 1 minute 38 seconds at the Maine coast. Twenty-five miles on either side of the center it will last a minute and a little more than 35 seconds; 40 miles from the center it will last just over a minute.

The chance for fair weather at 3:30 p. m. on August 31 is about 55 per cent, according to records of several years. It is best in Canada and Maine inland, both of which figure about 60 per cent.

Locations within 5 miles of the eclipse center published by the astronomers are:

Maine—Kennebunk, Cape Porpoise, Kennebunk Port, Kennebunk Beach, Biddleford Pool, Biddleford, Saco, Limerick, Cornish, Kezar Falls, West Baldwin, Hiram, East Broomfield, Fryeburg.

New Hampshire—Center Conway, Conway, North Conway (perhaps a dozen astronomical expeditions will center around these Conways), South Chatham, Kearsarge, Intervale, Jackson, Mount Washington, Randolph, Jefferson Highlands, Jefferson, Lancaster, Groveton, Stratford, North Stratford.

Vermont—Bloomfield, Island Pond, Morgan Center, Morgan, Derby, Derby Line.

Five miles from the center shortens the duration of the eclipse only about half a second.

Past Cape Cod the eclipse curves out to sea and finally ends at sunset in the region of the Atlantic Ocean doldums halfway across to Africa.

Joan Crawford's Charge Of Money Plot Dropped

Los Angeles, May 7 (A.P.).—An investigation into what was described by Joan Crawford, film star, as an attempt to extort money, was dropped today by the district's attorney's office. Investigators said the actress' apparent fear was based on a note which was slipped under the door of her home, asking for an appointment.

At the suggestion of investigators, she met the writer, who proved to be an Eastern youth. The conversation was recorded on a dictation machine and after being taken into custody and questioned, the youth was released. Neither the subject of the conservation, the name of the youth nor an explanation from the actress of what led her to fear the note was an extortion plot was disclosed.

CHURCH REPLICA PLANNED

rebuilt of more durable material But three of those early churches—Pohick, Falls Church and Payne's—were all built of brick from the same pattern of plan and by the same group of eminent Virginians. Two of them, Falls Church and Pohick, are standing in their pristine state. In very recent times Pohick has been restored, it now has a rector, and services are held there regularly.

When Payne's Church was built it was in the Indian country. Who inspired it we do not know; perhaps the rector of Truro Parish, the noted Rev. Lee Massey. In the archives of the Bishop of London lies that record, along with many other Virginia colonial records; and one day it will be dug out, and then we shall know for certain.

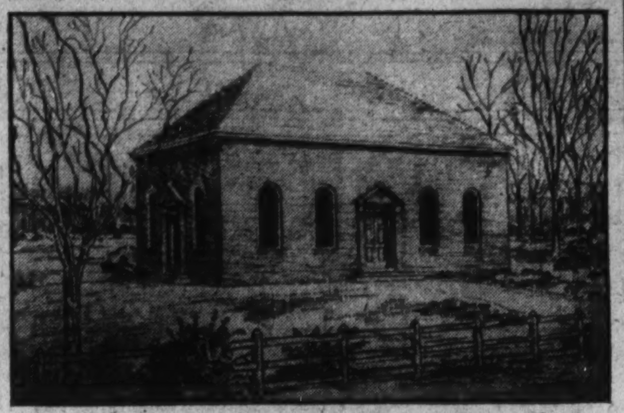
Pioneers had evidently pushed their way into the back country from the river settlements, and with that well-known habit of Englishmen they saw the need of a church as well as of a schoolhouse. Their need probably was seen by the rector of the parish, and he laid it before his vestry. And that is how it came about that a group of the most distinguished Virginians gave the money and superintended the building of this historic little church in the woods.

Fortunately for the amateur antiquarian, the records of the vestry of this old meeting house have been preserved and we know who supplied the money and who built the church when it was built, how it was built, and what it cost. One of these records reads:

"At a Vestry held for Truro parish, the 28th, 29th and 30th days of November, 1765. Present, Mr. Edw. Payne, Colo. Geo Washington, Capt. Posey, Capt. Daniel McCarthy, Colo. Geo. William Fairfax, Mr William Gardner, Mr. Thomas Withers Coffer, Mr. William Lincon, Mr. Thomas Ford and Mr Alex. Henderson Ordered that the vestry meet at Mr. William Gardner's on the first Monday in February next, in order to agree with workmen to undertake the building of a brick church, to contain 1600 superficial feet. And that the church wardens advertise the same in as publick a manner as may be."

This is the inception of Payne's Church. The vestry met at Mr. William Gardner's on the 3d and 4th of February, 1766, all of the vestrymen being present except Capt. Posey, "to inquire the most convenient place to erect a new church and to agree with the workmen to build the same." It was then determined to build "the new church * * * on the Middle Ridge, near the Ox road" on land "supposed to be belonging to Mr. Thomazen Ellzey." A committee of four, headed by Mr. Edward Payne, was selected to lay off the grounds. To Mr. Payne was given the contract to build the church "for the sum of five hundred and seventy-nine pounds Virginia currency."

Who drew the plans for the church we do not for a certainty know. The vestry ordered Mr. Edward Payne "to pay to Mr. John Ayres forty shillings for his plans and estimates." This sole entry in the vestry records saves the name of Mr. John Ayres from utter oblivion. His plans must have come from London, where one could even then get a book of church plans or house plans made to order, but showing the influence of Inigo Jones and Sir Christopher Wren.



Payne's Episcopal Church at Falls Church, Va., built in 1768 and now being restored.

Washington's careful and practical business habits did not desert him even when he came to attend to the Lord's business, for an entry on the vestry records informs us "that Colo. Geo. Washington, Capt. Daniel McCorty, Colo. Geo. William Fairfax, Mr. Alex. Henderson & Mr. Tho. Ford, or any three of them, (were ordered) to view and examine the building from time to time as shall be required."

This church was used up until the Revolution, and after that war it fell into disuse, because the Established Church was not so very popular—at least not more popular than King George, and he was not so well liked at that. By 1800 it had fallen into total disuse, and then the Baptists got hold of it and used it until the second revolution came on the country.

In that wholly unnecessary war old Pohick Church was converted into a stable for Union cavalry horses and its wonderful old oak pews and interior woodwork were torn out and cut up for firewood to boil cabbages and salt pork for the soldiers. Payne's Church was torn down to the ground in 1862, the bricks being used for chimneys in the permanent quarters of the soldiery. And with that desecration the church passed out of mind.

All that is left of it is the rubbish of the foundation, which Delos H. Smith, a Washington architect, is excavating with all the reverence with which Prof. Schliemann dug up the ruins of Troy and other archeologists are now uncovering the monuments of ancient Egypt and Palestine. The communion service was in the possession of an old lady who had worshiped there in the olden times, and in 1845 she gave it to the church at Centerville, where it was still in use some years ago and may still be in use now.

Let us now come back to Fairfax Court House. About 40 years ago the Episcopalians in that lovely little village built themselves a frame church, which they called Zion Church. That was truly an odd name to give their church, for it is so typical of the Methodists. In the olden times the Methodists called their Church "the old ship of Zion"—but they had no patent right to the name and use it no longer, except in some of the rural sections of the deep South.

Zion Church is the lineal descendant of Payne's Church, which stood two miles, more or less, from Fairfax Court House. A year ago Zion Church called as rector a young missionary from Africa, the Rev. Herbert A. Donavan, who married in South Carolina. One who knows the young rector well described him to this writer as a bundle of energy and "bright as a whip."

Mr. Donavan and his vestry, of whom Walton Moore is one, have conceived the idea of building a new church at Fairfax Court House on the site of Zion Church; and it is to be a replica of old Payne's Church. The work of drawing the plans was given to Delos H. Smith, and his interest in the matter soon became an enthusiasm that has carried him even to England to study the colonial type of churches. He has worn out two or three perfectly good cars traveling all over Virginia and the Carolinas to see and study first hand the colonial churches that still stand in these lovely old colonies.

Fortunately for Mr. Smith and his colaborers, the vestry records of old Truro Parish gave a minute description of Payne's Church, and in 1861 some one, in a moment of inspiration, had a photograph made of the exterior of the church. With these and with his intimate knowledge of colonial church architecture, Mr. Smith has been enabled to reproduce a faithful likeness of this historic shrine. It will be rebuilt just as it was built under Washington's eye from John Ayres' plans and by Capt. Edward Payne's supervision, in all respects a true copy, except the pews and interior arrangement will be modernized. Dr. Goodwin may preach at old Bruton Parish in the presence of a throne pew or dais, but the Rev. Herbert Donavan is too democratic and republican for that. To say nothing of the heritage of the Zion congregation.

Work will soon begin on this memorial, and when it is completed there will be a great day at old Fairfax, with a gathering of the clans from all over the world, for so wide does the old parish touch humanity.

ALICE IN WONDERLAND HERE

millions who had read the book were not aware that there ever was any real "Alice." They simply took it for granted that the entire book, with all its settings, was pure fiction. They never thought or suspected that this conglomeration of fanciful stories was actually told to a little girl and her sisters, and at their own insistent urgings. But of recent years, and especially since the purchase of the original manuscript and its public exhibition in various leading cities of America the truth regarding this has come to light.

While "Alice in Wonderland" itself is a pure fairy tale, or, more properly, a string of fairy tales woven together, Alice herself was a real girl, and the one who told her the fairy tales a sincere admirer.

Charles L. Dodgson, better known by his pen name, Lewis Carroll, was born in Daresbury, Northwestern England, January 27, 1832, one hundred years ago. While a teacher of higher mathematics in Christ Church College, Oxford University, lecturer, and author of a number of works on mathematics, he is best known by his popular "Lewis Carroll" story books for children, "Alice in Wonderland" and "Through the Looking-glass."

Alice Favorite Child.

One of his best and earliest juvenile friends was a little girl named Alice Liddell, whose father was dean of Christ Church College. Alice had two sisters, one older and one younger than herself. Mr. Dodgson was fond of all three, but Alice was his favorite.

Being somewhat of a photographer and having a studio of his own, he took pictures of the Liddell girls, dressed in fantastic ways. One taken of Alice, called "The Beggar Child," Tennyson said was the most beautiful picture of a child he had ever seen.

From this we may gather that Alice was doubtless a handsome little girl, and, together with the fact that she had an insatiable love for stories, can better understand why Mr. Dodgson was so fond of her, and why she became the heroine of his famous story books.

It was while out boat riding with the Liddell girls one hot summer afternoon up the Isis River, a tributary of the Thames, July 2, 1862, that "Alice in Wonderland" had its origin. From all three of the girls came the request, "Please tell us a story." Proceeding with the story until he was almost out of breath, Mr. Dodgson would say, "Now, let's wait till next time." The three little girls would lie flat on the bottom of the boat for a minute and then, lifting their heads, would say, "Now it's next time!" Sometimes, while in the midst of a thrilling tale, he would pretend to go fast asleep, to their great dismay, and then, awakening, he would continue with the fascinating tale.

Author "Printed" Entire MS.

Almost the entire "Alice in Wonderland," it is said, was told on that one afternoon, excepting the poems, which were added later.

Alice was so pleased with the story she wanted Mr. Dodgson to write it out for her. This he did, printing every word of its 90 pages with the most painstaking care, and illustrating it with 37 original pen drawings. This he had neatly bound in morocco, with title stamped in gilt. Then, all carefully wrapped, he made Alice a present of it the next Christmas, December 25, 1862, now 70 years ago minus a few months. She was 10 years old then. As originally prepared, it was called "Alice's Adventures Under Ground," but when it came to be printed the title was changed to "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland." For short, we now call it "Alice in Wonderland."

We can imagine how delighted she must have been upon receiving the unique gift, and how pleased, upon opening it, she must have been, to read the beautifully printed and handsomely decorated dedication: "A Christmas Gift to a Dear Child in Memory of a Summer Day." How pleased and surprised she must have been also, as she turned its pages, to find it so profusely illustrated, and, in an oval near the bottom of the last page, a picture of herself, taken by Mr. Dodgson. Little wonder she clung to this until late in life, as one of her most highly valued keepsakes and priceless treasures. To part with it, even for so large a sum, must have been a struggle giving her inward pain.

Given to All Children.

At first there was no thought of publishing the work, its production, as already stated, being the work of pure love, with no thought of fame or other reward than the gratitude and delight springing from a child's heart. But after George Macdonald, a friend of Mr. Dodgson, had read it, he told him it was wrong to keep all that fun away from other children, and that he ought to have it published.

Accordingly, Mr. Dodgson proceeded to prepare copy for the printer, Alice lending him the original for the purpose, and the artists, Sir John Tenniel, being engaged to prepare drawings for it. When finished, it was sent to the well known publishers, Macmillan & Co., who, upon receiving it, immediately agreed to publish it. The first edition made its appearance in July, 1965, just three years from the first telling of the story. Not anxious that it should be known who was the real author of the work, Mr. Dodgson arranged with the publishers that it should appear under the name of Lewis Carroll.

Before long it made its appearance in America, was translated into most of the European languages, and then into the Chinese and other Oriental tongues. It is safe to say that millions of copies of it have been published, and it must be a source of great satisfaction to "Alice" that she has lived to see it become so famous and such a general favorite in child literature.

Author's Romance Blasted.

After reading "Alice in Wonderland," Queen Victoria was so pleased with it that she sent to Mr. Dodgson for a copy of all of his published works. This was indeed a high compliment to him and his classic.

There is a sequel to this story, less generally known even than the fact that there was a real "Alice," which, if true, contains the real romance and tragedy in it—a sequel, the telling of which is enough to make the angels weep, and move every true and tender sympathizing heart to tears. It is this:

Mr. Dodgson's love and admiration for Alice, despite the 20 years difference in their ages, were so great that he secretly cherished the hope of making her his bride some day. Like Jacob of old waiting and toiling patiently for 14 long years for his Rachel, Dodgson was willing to wait patiently until Alice had grown to womanhood and a suitable marriageable age—eight or ten years perhaps.

After waiting thus, he at length asked her father, the dean, for her hand, so we are told, but only to have his cherished hopes blasted and his petition rudely turned down by the stern prelate, with the statement that the idea was preposterous, and that he was scarcely able to earn enough to support himself, let alone caring for a wife and family.

Little did this unsympathetic father realize the depth and sincerity of Mr. Dodgson's love for Alice, or that the Christmas gift he had made her was one day not only to make its author world-famous, but bring to him both wealth and honor, and finally to be sold for enough to place its fortunate possessor on easy street.

Thus was a truly great and real romance rudely shattered, and a truly great man robbed of the idol of his heart.

Though Alice married another, and reared a family of three sons, two of whom she lost in the World War, she kept her treasured keepsake given her by Mr. Dodgson till late in life, and he, true to his first love, chose to live a single life. Possibly he may have cherished the hope that fate might even yet, at some distant day, unite them, as it had others under similar circumstances. But even this, if so, was denied him. He died as he had lived, unmarried, his death taking place at Guildford, Surrey County, England, January 14, 1898, within a few days of his sixty-sixth birthday, while Alice, the girl he loved, has survived him, lo, these four and thirty years, and is still with us.

A BIT of news that has been overlooked in the turbulency of the last week is the appointment of Senator James Hamilton Lewis, of Illinois, as a member of the board of visitors at West Point. Lewis succeeds the late Senator Harris, of Georgia.

As I understand it, Senator Lewis will be expected to go to West Point, review the cadets and then regale them with a speech of the inspirational variety.

What a spectacle that will be! I don't mean the cadets; I mean J. Ham. I can see him now as he stands on the parade ground, his coral-colored whiskers whipping in the breeze; his shoulders thrown back and his delicate, tapering hand describing benediction as the boys strut past.

In his oration, Ham will run the whole emotional scale, and he will carry the cadets with him. He will double them up with wit, then straighten them out with soberness, and finally sweep them up to Olympus with a patriotic fervor such as West Point has never known.

In selecting Ham Lewis, who, incidentally, fought in the Spanish-American War, Minority Leader Joe T. Robinson made a ten strike. Certainly, he gave the West Pointers a break.

WINNERS SELECTED IN RECORD CONTEST

Clarendon Woman to Get Camden Audition as First Prize Award.

At the close of the second week of conscientious labor involved in judging the merits of nearly 5,000 records, K. H. Berkely, of Radion Station WRC; William T. Pierson, of Station WMAL, and Fred Phaler, of Station WOL, official judges, yesterday made known the winners in the recent Washington Post-RCA Victor home-recording contest.

In the professional class, Louis L. Annis, of the Westchester Apartments, and the Herb Gordon Trio, of the Wardman Park Hotel, were selected for formal auditions at the great Victor Co. laboratory in Camden, N. J. Selected as possessing the outstanding voice in the amateur classification, Miss V. M. Sellars, 313 Whalon avenue, Clarendon, Va., will be given a similar audition at the Victor laboratories, and, in addition, will receive an RCA-Victor radio combination, equipped for home recording, and valued at $287.50.

Ontario Crash Occurs as Province Investigates Bombing Series.

St. Thomas, Ontario, May 7 (A.P.). Walter Willsie, fireman, and Thomas Howe, engineer, were injured seriously today in an unexplained explosion of the boiler of a Michigan Central Railway locomotive.

The blast came while officials were investigating a series of bombings in Ontario Province in the last ten days. Joe Moczulski, 17, victim of an explosion Thursday night at the Catalano Fruit Warehouse at London, was buried there today. Another bombing at Crowland caused the death of three men last Saturday.

A. H. Mullen, inspector of the Dominion Bureau of Explosives, investigated reports that the London blast was caused by a powerful explosive. The train explosion occurred while the train was traveling about 40 miles an hour. The cars remained on the rails.

The society sent resolutions of condolence to the people of France on the death of their president.

KENTUCKIANS REJOICE AS BURGOO KING WINS DERBY; NATS' LONG-DISTANCE HITTING ROUTS WHITE SOX, 7-2

Reynolds Hits Homer Off Frasier

Nats Also Pound Out 2 Triples and 3 Two-Baggers.

Crowder, Unsteady, Escapes Damage in Many Pinches.

By FRANK H. YOUNG.

FOLLOWING their loss in the opener against the Chisox Friday the Nationals regained their stride yesterday and turned in a 7-to-2 victory. "General" Alvin Crowder went the route for the home crew, and, despite the fact that he granted but eight hits, he was anything but effective and was near being yanked on several occasions. It was only because his mates kept adding runs in the first four innings that he did not get his walking papers.

Vic Frasier started on the hill for the visitors and he seemed to have just the variety of stuff that the Nats liked, being pounded off the hill in the third. By that time he had yielded ten hits and six runs, and this total was more than sufficient to assure the natives the verdict. Against the combined efforts of Alphonse Thomas, Paul Gregory and Hal (Sweet Kitty) McKain, the Nats molded but one more marker and but three more hits.

The biggest of Washington's 13 safeties was a homer by Carl Reynolds, his first of the season, with triples by Myer and Manush and doubles by Manush, Judge and Spencer giving the Nats quite a healthy total-base total.

IN THE WAKE OF THE GAME

IT will be up to Fred Marberry to cop the deciding game with the Chisox for the Nationals here this afternoon, Manager Walter Johnson now being convinced that the big Texan has found the hop to his fast one, the loss of which made him ineffective as a starter earlier in the season.

Lou Fonseca has been trying for some time to get the kinks out of the salary wing of the veteran, Ted Lyons,

'Young' Stribling Plans 3 Australian Fights

Macon, Ga. (A.P.).—"Pa" Stribling may take his fighting son, W. L. "Young" Stribling to Australia for three fights.

An offer has been received from an Australian promoter for engagements for the Macon heavyweight, and negotiations are expected to result in the Striblings embarking for Sydney early in June.

"I believe the trip to Australia will do W. L. lots of good," his father-manager said. "We'd be there five months or more and he could get back into real condition."

NEW YORK, May 7 (A.P.).—Charley Ruffing gave the Yankees their second brilliant pitching performance today when he held the Detroit Tigers to three singles and a homer by Jonathan Stone and struck out nine to win, 4 to 1.

The Yanks got all their runs off Tom Bridges in the seventh. Babe Ruth was ejected from the game in the seventh for disputing a decision by Umpire Owens.

Chicago Cubs Win From Dodgers, 3-0

Malone Wins Pitching Duel From Phelps; Six Double Plays.

Chicago, May 7 (A.P.).—One bad inning by Brooklyn decided a mound duel between Pat Malone and Babe Phelps today and gave the Cubs their second straight victory over the Dodgers, 3 to 0.

Phelps pitched well, except in the sixth inning when Chicago, led by young Bill Herman, scored all its runs. Malone was a bit wabbly at the start, giving four walks in the first two innings, but he settled down and pitched a six-hit shutout and fanned seven.

The victory extended the Cubs' home winning streak to nine victories in twelve games. It dropped Brooklyn to seventh place in the standing, behind the idle New York Giants. Six double plays were made in the game, four by the Dodgers.

TRIBE SNAPS STREAK OF MACKMEN

Earnshaw Is Pounded in 10-7 Loss; Foxx Gets 7th Homer.

PHILADELPHIA, May 7 (A.P.).—The Philadelphia Athletics raised their 1931 American League championship flag today and then took a beating from the Cleveland Indians, 10 to 7.

George Earnshaw, the right-handed ace of the Mackmen, started the game and was driven out in the fifth inning, Joe Vosmik's home run being the death blow. After that, Connie Mack sent in Deshong, Cain and Rommel, but they failed to stop the Indians to any great extent.

Four Homers Feature Game.

Four homers featured the game, two on each side. Jimmy Foxx slammed out his seventh of the season and Mickey Cochrane his fifth. Cissell sent a homer into the left field seats with two Indians aboard to start the downfall of Earnshaw in the second inning.

The Ohio team made eighteen hits, only four for extra bases, but they bunched them up in fine style and the A's were never in the running. Willis Hudlin was credited with the victory for Cleveland, but had to be relieved by Wes Ferrell in the ninth inning with two on and none out.

Chicago, May 7 (A.P.).—George Lott, of Chicago, today upset Ellsworth Vines, national singles tennis champion and Davis Cup Team member, in an exhibition, 6—4, 6—1.

A high wind hampered the players. Frank Shields defeated John Van Ryn, 7—5, 6—3, in another match.

Lott, paired with Van Ryn, helped to score another victory over Vines, who played with Shields in the doubles. The score was 6—8, 7—5, 6—3.

Lynchburg Trackmen Defeat Emory-Henry

Lynchburg, Va., May 7 (A.P.).—By taking second and third places in the half-mile run, the final event on the program, the Lynchburg College track team scored a 64 to 62 victory over Emory and Henry here today in a meet that saw the lead switch back and forth all through the events.

Pierce, of Emory and Henry broke the school mark for the javelin with a throw of 178 feet 1/4 inches, while McClure, of the Hornets, who placed second, also cracked the record with a toss of 165 feet.

Capt. Oakes, of the Hornets, equalled the school mark in the century with time of 10 seconds flat.

Plaat, of the Wasps, was high scorer with 14 points, followed by five others, with 8 points each.

Navy Crews Beaten by Syracuse

Orange Varsity, Juniors and Frosh in Clean Sweep.

Special to The Washington Post.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., May 17—The Orange tipped blades of Syracuse University oarsmen reigned supreme over the waters of Severn river this afternoon, the Varsity, Junior Varsity and freshmen eight-oared crews of the university, coached by the veteran James A. Ten Eyck, sweeping to victory in all three races of their annual regatta with the Annapolis midshipmen thereby duplicating the performancees of a year ago.

All three races were over the Henley distance of a mile and five-sixteenths, and were rowed under ideal conditions of weather and water, the only adverse element being that the tide was against the crews, hence no exceptional time was made.

Frosh Race Decided by Three Lengths.

Starting the program by taking the freshmen race by three-quarters of a length, the Orange Junior Varsity crew followed by coming from behind and with a brilliant burst of speed and in the final stretch, overcame a length lead, and finished a bare quarter length in the van of the Navy Jayvees.

In the Varsity brush the Syracusans led all the way. They were out in front by a full boat length at the half way point. Here the Tars put on a spurt to reduce the margin slightly, but the Orange bladesmen met the challenge and again moved slowly but steadily ahead until the finish.

The time of the respective crews at the finish was: Syracuse Varsity, 7:08; Navy Varsity, 7:15; Syracuse Jayvees, 7:16½; Navy Jayvees, 7:18; Syracuse Freshmen, 7:21; Navy Plebes, 7:23½.

The fact that the Navy seniors were defeated by a more decisive margin than the other crews, was perhaps the big surprise of the day, in view of their previous triumphs over Princeton and Columbia. But the Syracusans, with "Al" Lombardi, weighing over 200 pounds, and one of the heaviest college stroke oars in recent years, set a pace from the outset that the naval lads proved incapable of matching.

Orange Sweepsters Take Big Lead.

The rival varsity boats were sent away to a perfect start. The Orange sweepsters appeared to get more out of their pull in the first 20 or more strokes, gauged at a 40-to-the-minute clip, and soon had established a quarter length lead, which was steadily increased until the half-way point was reached, when a short gap of open water was showing between the stern of the visiting shell and the prow of the sailors' craft.

At this point the Middies hit up their stroke and cut down the lead by about half a length. But the Orange oarsmen followed suit and again began to creep away, and from then on the issue was never in doubt. Syracuse added three-quarters of a length to its lead in the last 3 yards of the driving finish.

The brush between the jayvee boats furnished the real contest of the day. The middies went out in front at the start and soon established themselves in the lead by a length and held it until well after passing the halfway mark. But the Orange boys had plenty in reserve and staged one of the greatest drives seen here in years, to overcome the advantage and win by three-quarters of a length.

The race between the freshmen eights was lose from start to finish. Syracuse maintained a slight varying advantage over the whole route, though it never was as great as a length. At one stage the plebes drew up almost on even terms, but the Orange frosh were not to be denied.

Smashed Shell Delays Plebe Race.

The Middies got a bad break to start the day's proceedings. When the plebes launched their shell, one of the oarsmen slipped and punched a hole in the bottom of the frail craft. The race

MARYLAND UNIVERSITY, Central High of Washington and Hagerstown (Md.) High romped off with the chief honors yesterday in Maryland's annual field day carnival in Byrd Stadium before 6,000 spectators.

Maryland's varsity track team conquered Johns Hopkins, another old foe, 84 to 42, for its second triumph of the season, in a dual meet conducted concurrently with the fifteenth annual Maryland interscholastic games.

Central Leads With 33 Points.

Central High, shaking off an athletic jinx that has camped on its trail much too long to suit Blue and White followers, scored 33 points to capture the interscholastic track and field trophy for its first major victory in five years. The county division of the games was topped by Hagerstown, with 17 points.

Coach Bill Foley's Blue and White thin-clads presented a well-balanced combination that scored in seven of the 13 events. They made a sweep of points in the 100-yard dash, won by Price in 10 1-5 seconds, and took first places in the 440-yard dash (Babcock), and broad jump (Robinson).

Tech High closely pressed Central by garnering 31½ points, and also won the mile relay from its only competitor, Woodstock (Va.) in the fair time of 3 minutes, 45 3-5 seconds. The race was a runaway, however, and better time would have been recorded with keener opposition. Cohen, Edwards, Lank and Hartman formed the Maroon team.

Eastern, With Slye Banned, Fifth.

The 1931 winner, Eastern High, robbed of its biggest point scorer, Bob Slye, by a ruling that he had exceeded the legal span of varsity competition, had to be content with fifth place. Western's one-man team of Henry Beers, who grabbed individual scoring laurels with 13 points finished in fourth place, while third went to Handley High of Winchester, Va., coached by Johnny Parsons, former Tech and Maryland star. Beers won both hurdle races and was second in the high jump.

Two interscholastic and one county high record fell during the games that were speedily run off preceding the lacrosse feature. Both of the new interscholastic marks were achieved by Handley High representatives—Stipe, who heaved the javelin 168 feet 4 inches to excel the former mark by 3 feet 7 inches, and Dunlop, who pushed the 12-pound shot 48 feet 11 inches, or 4 inches better than the old standard. McLaughlin, of Towson High, clipped one-fifth second from the county high record for the century by stepping the distance in 10 1-5 seconds. The same robust youth won the 220 in 23 2-5.

Hennessey, of Hagerstown, led the county high scorers with 11 points by virtue of seconds in the 100 and 220 yard dashes and first in the broad jump.

BURGOO KING, away fast and cleverly rated, followed the pace closely until reaching final three-eighths, where he easily wore down ECONOMIC and, drawing into a long, decisive command, won easily. ECONOMIC, taken into the lead, made the pace under good rating, was no match for winner, but held on well, outstaying STEPENFETCHIT. Latter saved considerable ground in early stages, was under steadying restraint until reaching final half mile, rallied mildly when brought to outside in stretch and was wearing down ECONOMIC. BRANDON MINT moved up fast at stretch turn and despite lack of room was going boldly in final stages. OVERTIME held on stubbornly in a good effort. TICK ON, much used at the post and in close quarters much of the trip, could not get to leaders when clear and was under severe pressure in the final quarter. OUR FANCY had no mishap. GALLANT SIR quit. ADOBE POST had a rough trip. LIBERTY LIMITED went badly lame and was pulled up.

Jockey E. James Is Former Louisville Newsboy.

Tick On Draws Most Attention in Pre-Race Interest.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., May 7 (A.P.).—Today was Kentucky's day at Churchill Downs and the Blue Grass State presented its best show to honor the victory of Burgo King, a Kentucky-owned and Kentucky-bred horse, in the Kentucky Derby.

His jockey also is a pride of old Kentucky. Eugene James, 19 years old, was selling newspapers on the streets of Louisville only a few years ago. Last year he was among America's leading riders.

The third Derby victory of Colonel E. R. Bradley, philantrophic Lexington horseman, needless to say was a popular one among his fellow Kentuckians. Burgoo King is a son of Bubbling Over, the thoroughbred with which Bradley won the Derby in 1926.

He was bred at Colonel Bradley's Idle Hour Farm near Lexington, where every year Colonel Bradley presents a charity race meeting and turns over the proceeds to buy Thanksgiving and Christmas dinners for children in orphanages of the state.

Burgoo King Took His Name From Kentucky Delicacy.

The Derby winner is named after a delectable known to all Kentuckians, Burgoo, served at many outdoor gatherings, is a composition of meat and vegetables on the order of a stew. "Thick soup" is what outsiders call it, to the great disgust of Kentuckians. "Nectar and Ambrosia," the hardboots reply, and swear it had the barbecues and corn pones of other states beaten 40 ways for flavor and aroma.

The incomparable Derby atmosphere was present today in all its phases. The weather man was outsmarted for the second straight year. He predicted rain, but not a drop fell to dampen the ardor of the thousands who thronged the Downs, the women dressed in their best and many men sporting straw hats. Derby day is official "straw hat day" in Kentucky.

Urchins and Gamins Crash Gates.

The crowd of 40,000 was swelled by the usual throngs of urchins and gamins who crashed the gates, jumped the fences and outran policemen trying to catch them. A hush fell when the skies darkened, for the first time during the day, a half-hour before Derby post, leading to the belief the weather man might have been right after all. The thousands were comparatively quiet when the Derby entries were led into the paddock, but the sun burst through the clouds to remain shining until after the big race, and the crowd regained its spirits.

A band arrayed in red and white paraded through the paddock and out in the stretch. "The Star Spangled Banner" was played, and then "My Old Kentucky Home," as the horses paraded to the post and

$6,000, Stepenfetchit $3,000 and Brandon Mint, $1,000.

Burgoo King, going to the post at odds of slightly better than 5½ to 1, paid the good price of $13.24 to win for each $2 ticket in the mutuels, also $5.08 to place and $4 to show.

Economic paid $15.62 to place and $8.54 to show, while Stepenfetchit's price to show was $3.52.

Burgoo King, which stepped the mile and a quarter in 2 minutes 5 1-5 seconds, is the second son of a Derby winner to add to the family prestige with another victory. Halma, winner in 1895, sired Alan-a-Dale, which came home first in 1902.

Except for Tick Ons bad luck, it was as truly run a race as any in which so big a field has gone to the post. In only three previous years—1923, 1928 and 1929—did bigger fields start and none of these was quite as unruly as the score of 3-year-olds handled today by Starter William Hamilton.

Burgoo King, unhampered by having No. 13 post position, was as well behaved as any in the stall gates. Tick On was the worst, breaking through the barrier no less than ten times.

Finally, after they were gotten away, there was plenty of bumping and rough riding in the mad chase for positions down the stretch in the first run past the grand stand. Our Fancy broke first, but Economic quickly took command and had a good two lengths lead within the first half mile, followed by Brandon Mint, Burgoo King, Our Fancy, Brother Joe and the filly, Oscillation. Tick On was fourteenth away from the barrier and no better than twelfth, pocketed, as they swept past the half mile mark.

Going into the back stretch, Gold Check made a brief move into fourth position, closely followed by the Whitney pair, Stepenfetchit and Overtime. Tick On also began to pull up.

Past the mile it was Economic by a head, hard-pressed now by Burgoo King, with Brandon Mint, Stepenfetchit, Overtime and Tick On running in that order, fairly well bunched.

Jockey James, whose contract was bought by Col. Bradley only a week ago, made his decisive move coming around the last turn into the stretch. With giant strides, under his rider's sharp lashing, Burgoo King leaped ahead and quickly opened a commanding gap of four lengths.

Stepenfetchit, under Ensor's urging, moved into third place, but could do no better. Brandon Mint had enough in reserve to hold fourth position from the closing challenges of Overtime and Tick On.

Liberty Limited's break-down, marking another disappointment in the quest of the Three D's Stable for a Derby winner, was not unexpected. The colt had given evidence of hav-

Montgomery County Meet Brings New Track Records

SEVERAL records were broken in the eighteenth annual Montgomery County school track and field meet held at Rockville yesterday. Weather conditions were ideal and the largest field ever to compete was on hand, according to Edwin W. Broome, superintendent of schools. Because of the large number of competitors, Dr. William Burdick, head of the Baltimore Playground and Athletic League, brought 45 helpers to conduct the meet.

Montrose won Class A honors handily, with 59 points, with Dickerson a distant second and Barnesville, third. Sherwood-Sandy Spring enjoyed a big margin in Class B, with Bethesda-Chevy Chase showing the way in the junior high class. In this latter fight for points, the winners scored 134, with Rockville second, with 67½.

Kensington led the Class C schools with 95 points, as against Rockville's 47 total, with Bethesda-Chevy Chase also coppping in the point-battle in Class E, for senior high schools. Its winning total was 90½, with Rockville taking another second with 78.

Particular interest was shown in the senior high events. The three relay races were won by as many different schools, Bethesda-Chevy Chase taking the 660 junior medley, Sher-

PIMLICO RACE TRACK, May 7.—Gallant Knight won the Dixie Handicap here today and wrote turf history at the ancient course when he lowered the record for the mile and three-sixteenth course, the route of the Preakness, by two-fifths of a second, despite the fact that Jockey H. Schutte was looking back over his shoulder for many of the last 100 yards.

The distance that practically every good colt and filly has had an opportunity to try melted under the speed of the son of Bright Knight and he merely galloped to the finish ahead of Sun Meadow and Aegis. Sonny Workman, one of the day's riding heroes, saw the uselessness of trying to catch Gallant Knight in the stretch, and gave up, rating Sun Meadow only enough to hold the place award safe from Aegis.

Derby Day Lucky for Gallant Knight.

Derby day has been a high spot in the career of this horse. Running in the Kentucky classic in 1930, Gallant Knight was second to Gallant Fox. Last year it was on Derby day in the race before the main event that Gallant Knight stepped 6½ furlongs in 1:16½, the world's record for that distance. And today, the Dixie. Gallant Knight has a long list of prominent stake victories to his credit despite the fact that he is known as an unsound horse, having gone lame several times.

There was no stopping Gallant Knight today. He was rushed to the front and led the fine field down the stretch on the run for the clubhouse turn. Several speedsters, including Mate, tried to displace him but it was not to be done in this race. Schutte had little to do except ride and guide. Sun Meadow became a factor on the swing to the stretch and Workman managed to pick up some of the distance in the first part of the stretch run.

The burning pace that Gallant Knight set told on all the front runners except the ultimate winner.

The Audley Farms gained $14,550 for the winning end of the stake and Gallant Knight drew the applause of most of the crowd of 20,000 which sent him to the post a favorite.

Mate Disappoints in 1932 Debut.

Mate's first appearance of the year was a disappointment. Pete Bostwick, the gentleman rider, had the mount on the 1931 Preakness winner.

INCEPTION, kept in near attendance of the leaders from the start and, fencing in clever fashion, responded with good energy when making his challenge and withstanding a stout drive, outfinished Crumpler on the flat after the final fence. Crumpler, reserved for the first mile, displaced SILVERSKIN at the tenth fence, saved ground in the final stages and held on resolutely for the finish. BEELZEBUB, forwardly placed and jumping in good fashion, continued with good speed when the real test came. CAHANAMORE showed a good performance. TOTALISATOR was making up ground steadily from a slow beginning. BAROMETER went evenly. IRIDESCENT was held safe. SILVERSKIN tired badly after a mile. WAR EAGLE struck himself during the running and would not extend himself in the late stages. NIGHT RETREAT was pulled up going to the 12th fence.

SECOND RACE—Four and one-half furlongs. Purse, $1,300. For 2-year-olds; maidens. Start good from gates. Won driving. Place, same. Went to post at 2:35. Off at 2:39½. Winner, R. Parr's ch. c. Two-dollar mutuels paid—STAR PORTER, $5.10, $3.60, $2.70; MAROONED, $16.60, $8.90; LOUGH PORT, $6.30.

STAR PORTER, quick to get going and showing good speed, raced LOUGH PORT into defeat and, holding on willingly for the final drive, just lasted to stall off MAROONED. Latter, a forward factor from the start, was placed to punishment and was wearing the winner down at every stride approaching the finish. LOUGH PORT forced a good early pace, and held on well for the closing test. CONSIDERATE raced evenly throughout. POLLY F came determinedly on the outside. BLUE EMPEROR was unable to reach the leaders. The others were outrun.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,300. For 3-year-olds and upward. Claiming. Start good from gates. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 3:13. Off at 3:19. Winner—C. E. Grogan's b. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—WISE COUNT, $10.40, $5.70, $3.40; MEXICO, $5.20, $2.90; VOLTAGREEN, $2.40.

WISE COUNT, going in his best form and away fastest of all, was steadied along while saving ground, and drew out smartly in the final drive. MEXICO, rated close to the leaders, came around VOLTAGREEN and outfinished the latter when straightened into the home stretch. VOLTAGREEN, following in close pursuit of WISE COUNT for five furlongs, weakened after moving into the home stretch. MARLENE was held safe throughout. SOUTHTOUR had early speed.

FOURTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,300. For 3-year-olds and upward. Claiming. Start good from gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:49½. Off at 3:56½. Winner, C. O. Two-dollar mutuels paid—BUBOLA, $6.20, $3.00, $2.50; JOLLY PILOT, $2.90, $2.70; DOUBLE O, $5.30.

BUBOLA, rated within striking distance of the leaders, came with good courage in the final half-mile, wore JOLLY PILOT down when nearing the final furlong pole, and, kept under stiff pressure, was gradually drawing clear. JOLLY PILOT, taken under slight restraint and saving ground, shook off GENERAL LEJEUNE, but was unable to meet the winner's rush in the final drive. DOUBLE O, forced to race on the outside early, slipped through on the inside during the stretch run and closed gamely. GENERAL LEJEUNE weakened after making a stout effort midway of the far turn. STONE MARTIN was poorly handled. STEPPING SISTER had early speed.

FIFTH RACE—One and three-sixteenths miles. Purse, $15,000 added. The Dixie Handicap. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gates. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 4:30. Off 4:33. Two-dollar mutuels paid—GALLANT KNIGHT, $7.70, $3.50, $2.70; SUN MEADOW, $3.90, $3.10; AEGIS, $4.20.

GALLANT KNIGHT broke clear and took an easy lead going to the first turn, was taken under restraint for the first mile, and came away stoutly when released from restraint in the final three furlongs. SUN MEADOW, away slowly, worked his way up on the outside, made a stout effort midway of the far turn, but was held safe thereafter. AEGIS knocked off his stride directly after the break, worked his way up gamely, but could not menace the first two. MATE broke out at the start and impeded ROYAL RUFFIN and AEGIS, saved much ground throughout, but weakened in the final drive. BLENHEIM had no mishaps. FLAGSTONE was held safe. ANNIMESSIC was taken up sharply leaving the back stretch when FLAGSTONE and ROYAL RUFFIN were interfered with.

SIXTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,500. The Mount Washington Handicap. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 5:05. Off at 5:08. Winner, H. D. Two-dollar mutuels paid—VACILLATE, $5.10, $3.30, $2.30; VISHNU, $6.40, $3.20; CON AMORE, $2.50.

VACILLATE, hurried to the front, raced JAZ AGE into submission and, continuing with good courage for the final drive outstayed VISHNU. Latter, rushed into contention, moved up fast entering the homestretch, but swerved in behind the winner inside the final furlong, and had to be taken up sharply in the final sixteenth to come to the outside. CON AMORE dropped back when leaving the back stretch, was placed to strong pressure and closed strong. LADDER raced well, placed early, but faltered in the final issue. SNOBFUL was outrun. JAZ AGE quit after a fast five furlongs.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—B'AR HUNTER, $3.20, $2.80, $2.50; GAY BIRD, $5.20, $3.40; SISTER ZOE, $5.00.

B'AR HUNTER, a keen factor and handling his weight well, was put to severe punishment when approaching the home stretch, came courageously approaching the finish and was up in the final twenty yards. GAY BIRD, showing good speed, was rated in front under mild urging, saved ground and fought it out in determined fashion when the real issue came. SISTER ZOE, following close up, held on well in closing drive. WILLIAM T finished full of run. IMPISH, slow to settle in his stride, finished strong. JOHN F had no excuses.

the cheering grew tumultuous. Just as on last Derby day, for good luck, a rabbit hopped gaily down the stretch and disappeared in the infield crowd.

Eastern Invasion Not in Vain.

And then the Derby was run, and what a Derby! Old Kentucky won the lion's share of the pot, but the Eastern invasion was not in vain, Eastern horses running second, third and fourth.

Awaiting developments and the possibility of several scratches in the Derby field, the early thousands of spectators made no rush for the mutuel windows. Betting was on the smallest scale in at least ten years.

Crowds clustered around the stables, where the Derby hopefuls were quartered, but they caught only a few brief glimpses of the closely-guarded favorites.

Tick On drew the most attention Among its backers it was recalled that just twelve years ago the favorite's daddy, On Watch, finished third in a blanket Derby finish in the mud with Paul Jones and Upset, the latter noted as the only horse to beat Man o' War.

FIGHT CARD PROMISES ACTION

Hard-Working Boxers Clash Tomorrow at Portner's

By JACK ESPEY.

IF the cash customers take the bouts as seriously as do the fighters, the turnstiles should play a merry tune tomorrow night at Portner Arena, when the Day Nursery Athletic Association presents an all-star card comprising 34 rounds of boxing.

Here is a show wherein the talent will be battling to save their chances for future employment as well as for the purses of the moment. In some cases defeat will mean the end of the victim's local career, while in others it will at least prove costly to future earning power. The fighters realize these facts better than any one else; hence their determination to step lively, as you like it.

Billy Landers, for instance, must hold his own with or win over Benny Schwartz, veteran Baltimore bantamweight, in order to secure a subsequent engagement. The blond Norfolk scrapper has lost his last two bouts at Alexandria, to Midget Wolgast and Antol Kocsis, and a third straight loss will, as far as the Day Nursery is concerned, place him in the "washed up" class.

Both Fighters Have Incentive.

But as anxious as Landers is to win, he has no greater incentive than Schwartz, who is out to establish himself with Capital and Alexandria fans in his first appearance. The Baltimore star has been fighting ten years and has met three world's champions, Pancho Villa, Charley Phil Rosenberg and Corporal Izzy Schwartz, yet during the past five months Benny has found it difficult to land work, though he figures to give a good account of himself. He did just that in his last bout against Speedy Dado, Pacific Coast sensation, in November.

The value of victory also impresses the principals in the other two eight-round bouts which make up the features. In these contests Joe Smallwood, a Washington boy, who holds the Delaware State welterweight title, will meet Ken Overlin, Norfolk sailor, and Billy Strickler, Capital light heavyweight, will swap wallops with Bill Flemster, champion of the Carolinas.

Smallwood returns to his home precinct boasting a long string of victories, but the fans haven't forgotten that he was defeated in his last appearance hereabouts. He took a ten-round whipping from Harry Kid Groves last July at Fort Washington before he struck success in foreign territory. If Joe gets by Overlin he will be brought back for another bout, but he will possess no particular attractiveness should the sailor lad duplicate Groves' feat.

Overlin Must Win To Get Jobs.

On the other hand, Overlin, who was victorious in his only previous bout at Portner's—an eight-round decision over Tony D'Alessandro on April 12—will have little to sell the promoters if he is the loser.

Strickler and Flemster both have their hearts set on gaining steady employment throughout the outdoor season, which opens shortly. However, one necessarily will have his hopes dashed unless the result is a draw. Flemster, in his first chance at Portner's three weeks ago, knocked out Billy Schwartz in the first round, while Strickler, at the same time, was held to a draw by Sam Finazzo.

Young Van, local middleweight, has a clean slate to protect in the 6-round main preliminary with K. O. Burns, of Baltimore. Van has won all of his six previous bouts by quick kayoes. Burns is considered the strongest opponent yet selected for him.

Marino Marini, Italian southpaw lightweight, opens the show with Donald First, of Baltimore, in a four-rounder.

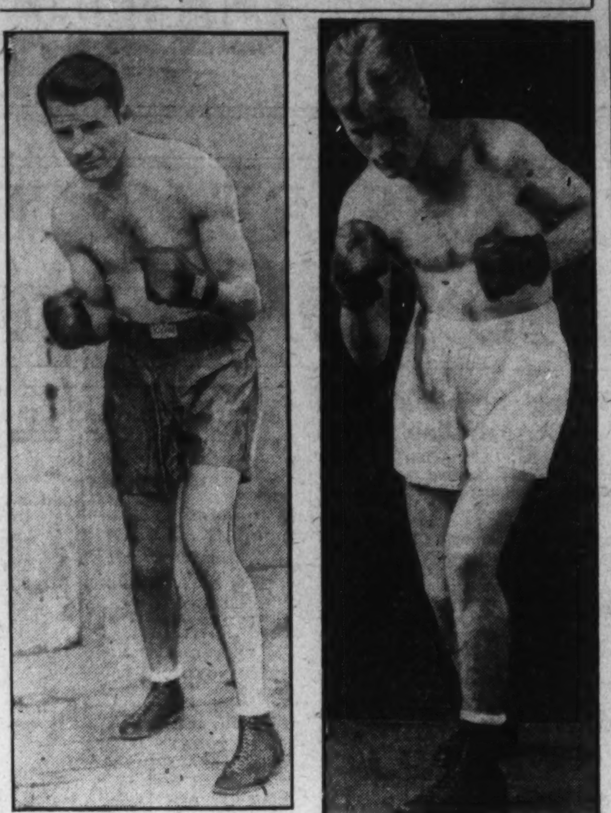
In Fistic Features Tomorrow Night



Joe Smallwood (left) and Billy Landers, both popular with Capital fight fans, will meet real tests tomorrow night on the Alexandria Day Nursery card in Portner Arena. Smallwood encounters Ken Overlin and Landers battles Benny Schwartz.

Deglane, Title Claimant, Wrestles Here Tuesday

WASHINGTON'S first outdoor wrestling show, and by far the most ambitious card the Bowser Boys at Bolling Field have attempted during their siege of Washington's muscle fortress, will be presented — weather permitting — Tuesday night on the airport field adjacent to the gymnasium.

With Henri Deglane, Mr. Bowser's own world champion, in the leading role, a miniature stadium seating 3,000 fans will be erected in anticipation of the biggest crowd the chain has been able to lure across the wastes of Anacostia.

Mr. Deglane won his claim to the championship on a bite. He was gnawed by Strangler Lewis, who was the champion of the Bowsers until he rumba'd over to the other side of the Canadian border and 'rassled Deglane. Deglane has beaten Sonnenberg and Don George since winning the title and is reported to be quite good. His Don George match drew 15,000 in Boston.

Frank Wycoff will be his opponent at Bolling. Wycoff is a big fellow, a former baseball player of some note, and seems able to take quite a pasting before flapping for the ropes. He is popular with Bolling fans.

Joe Malcewicz, the only blot on Deglane's record since he won the championship (Malcewicz held Henri to a draw two weeks ago) also is on the card. He meets Jake Patterson, who went to Syracuse University. Malcewicz has been at it for 16 years and is justly regarded as one of the best in the business.

Danny Winters, the most popular of the Bolling boys, heads the preliminary card. He meets Pat O'Hara, whoever that may be. August Benkert, one of the weirdest of all the weird rasslers, is up against Joe Cook, not the highly paid comedian, and "Bull" Garnon meets Lou Allaire.

Women will be charged full price. In the event of rain the matches will be held at the Bolling Field Gymnasium.

Boxing Bits Hereabouts

By JACK ESPEY

LAST Tuesday's bouts rehashed for Sunday consumption (taken with bicarbonate of soda):

Cowboy Owen Phelps proved he is a long distance fighter, as his manager, Jimmy Erwin, predicted. Phelps grew stronger as the bout progressed and showed his best form in the seventh and eighth.

But the Cowboy, a couple of years hence, won't be showing any form but that of a shambling, trembling punch-inebriate if he continues to sop up blows as he did from Godwin. The fact that Godwin's right was injured saved Phelps a worse beating.

Clarence Sloat sloat up to a walk as soon as his first wild swing missed "Beebee" Barron by a country mile. After that eight-round headache, the fans want no more of the Baltimorean.

Buck Taylor's crouching, weaving style confused Billy Essinger and the latter failed to solve it with a right uppercut until too late. Taylor, a fine physical specimen, weighing 128, can punch holes through a bank vault.

Each having bitten the canvas in the first round, Sammy Britt and K. O. Burns put on a slow-motion without benefit of rehearsal. They were tossing floaters near the finish.

Day Nursery officials are nogotiating with Harry Ebbetts, of Chicago, nationally rated light heavy, to match him against Godwin for the sixteenth at Portner's. Battling Bozo, who defeated Natie Brown on the Schmeling-Stribling card last summer, also is under consideration as Godwin's opponent.

Godwin is said to have closed for a match in Madison Square Garden on the 26th. He has gone to Long Island to train at Jimmy DeForrest's camp. Uzcudun and Walker top the card on which he is to appear.

Phelps is still in the vicinity, hoping to secure a bout with Vince Dundee. Promoter Cornell, of Twin-City Arena, has the match in mind and will route it over 12 or 15 rounds if arranged. Dundee likes a long distance, as does Phelps. In his New York tiffs with Len Harvey, of England, Dundee was behind for the first seven or eight rounds and won by virtue of late spurts.

Boxers anxious to perform at Portner's and Twin-City: George Nerron, Greek heavyweight, who is slated to meet Willie Stribling Tuesday night in Johnson, Miss.; Charley Thompson, Baltimore lightweight, who recently put an end to Jack Quigley's career; Billy Hoe, Mohawk Club lightweight, who wants a return shot at Roddy Davis, who held him to a draw at Fort Washington last summer, and Roy "Kid" Manley, Arkansas lightweight, who was doing main events in the West last year.

Benny Schwartz, opponent of Billy Landers in one of the eights on tomorrow night's all-star card at Alexandria, points proudly to the fact that he participated in the bout that drew the record boxing "gate" for Baltimore—$13,500. It was in 1923, when he met Pancho Villa, then world's flyweight champion, at the Fifth Regiment Armory. Manny Levine, now treasurer of the Gayety Theater in this city, served as ticket-seller in short pants, standing on a box behind the window so that he could see those who purchased his tickets.

JABS, HOOKS AND CROSSES—Gabe Navos, Filipino flyweight, is on the high seas, homeward bound. His first visit home in six years, and he takes a cauliflowered ear with him. * * * The Raymond boys of Baltimore want to show here. Manager Heine Blaustein says: "Get any one their weights and the Raymonds will do the rest." * * * Okay, Heine, but we hope it's not an act. * * * Eddie Cool, Philadelphia lightweight sensation, and Phil Raymond may be matched at Fort Washington. * * * Andy Chaney, a few years ago one of the world's best featherweights, is now working part time as ship's carpenter in Baltimore. Kid Williams and Bobby Garcia, other nationally known Baltimore fighters of the past decade, also are finding it tough to eat. While Joe Dundee and George (Knockout) Chaney are living comfortably with earnings of wise investments.

CANTONWINE FACES TEST THURSDAY

Meets "Trial Horse" in Feature at Auditorium.

JUST what future Dr. Josephus Turner, the well-known mat tycoon, has in mind for Howard Cantonwine, the personable mastodon with a college degree and a dislike of people who split infinitives, will be revealed next Thursday night at the Washington Auditorium, when Cantonwine meets Sandor Szabo.

Cantonwine, built along the same lines as Strangler Lewis, but much more active than that venerable old warrior, seems to be ideal material for Turner's summer torso dramas. Szabo, one of the greatest names in the game, is now the trial horse of the Curley bunch. If they get past the young Hungarian, they rate.

The rest of the Thursday night card sees such figures in Eastern rassling as Fritz Kley, George Calza, Doc Wilson and Mike Romano. Kley is matched against the venerable Romano, who has been having the wheeze taken out of his headlock and has not shown here in about six months.

Calza runs up against Frank Speer, a "college" rassler. Doc Wilson, more popular than ever, by reason of losing to the very unpopular Jim McMillen last week, takes on George McLeod. George Hagen and Alex Aberg will reenact their last week's bout all over again. Aberg, it seems, claimed that something was screwy with him or Hagen or somebody that night, and demanded a return engagement.

Ladies upon the presentation of gentlemen customers at the box office will be admitted free of charge to all sections of the house except the dedesirable ones.

CLOSE AMERICAN LEAGUE RACE INDICATED IN EARLY GAMES

West's Teams Are Proving Threats

Indians, Tigers May Revive Interest as Contenders.

"Runaway Races" in Late Years Costly to Magnates.

By FRANK H. YOUNG.

FOR the past several seasons, the chief lament of American League magnates has been that the pennant races in the junior circuit have not been close long enough to enable them to cash in at the turnstiles for a fair return on the millions of dollars invested.

While their rival, the National, has been enjoying good years for the reason that there have been several contenders right up to the final day of the season, in the American, the ultimate winner has been foreseen before the halfway mark has been reached, and the result has been that the cash customers have not "put out," simply marking time awaiting the world's series.

In 1924, when the Washington Club won its first pennant, the Yankees were close on their heels throughout, but these were the only two teams actually in the race, which meant that the other six teams in the league found it mighty hard to come close to breaking even at the box office.

Clubs Lost Money When Nats Won.

The next season found the Nationals repeating, but clinching the flag much earlier, with seven teams suffering financially as a result, while the seasons since then have been even more disastrous, except to the flag-winning team. Last year, it will be remembered, the Mackmen were "in" two months before the schedule was completed, meaning that the only attractions other teams had to offer were minor ones.

Babe Ruth, of course, attracts many fans in all cities, while Lou Gehrig, who has stolen much of the Bambino's stuff, proves to be an added attraction. These two helped the Yankees make a little money each year, whether they won the flag or not, and also helped their hosts when the New Yorkers were the visiting club. As a general rule, however, when one team steps out into a big lead any time around July 1, the magnates starve over the balance of the route.

There is much rejoicing in the junior circuit this season, but time will tell whether there is reason for it. The cause is that the Western clubs appear to have been strengthened, especially the Indians and Tigers. Heretofore, Philadelphia, New York and Washington have stood out like beacons over the other teams, and it was just a question of which would win.

Present Series To Test Teams.

In games played to date, the Indians and Tigers have run wild, and a glance at the standings show they are up among the elite. Both teams have been getting good pitching and good hitting and have given every indication of giving the league two additional drawing cards. But the fly in the ointment is that, except in their last series, they have played only in their own sector and their success merely may prove they are the best of the four teams in the West.

Wes Ferrell, who had breezed through five games unbeaten, came a cropper against the Mackmen Thursday in the Tribe's first game of its Eastern invasion, and this has taken some of the prestige from the Indians. The Indians invariably start well and finish poorly, and already there is a feeling that history is repeating itself this spring.

Harris' team still has the fans puzzled. It did not figure to show much, in view of its low position in the 1931 race, yet has shown a dash that can not be denied. Charley Gehringer, always a great, though colorless, player, not only has recovered from the sore-arm handicap which made him almost useless last year, but he has shown himself to be a home-run hitter of no mean ability.

Davis Big Aid To Detroit.

When he was trying to land Joe Judge from the Nationals, Harris stated that Dale Alexander, his first baseman, had cost the Tigers at least two positions in the standing by his terrible fielding. Now Bucky has taken on a youngster named Davis, who is fielding like a veteran and hitting at a lively clip.

As to the other Western teams, the Browns still have a good pitching staff and a tight defense, but their attacking power is a big question mark, while Manager Lou Fonseca, of Chicago, faces the big task of molding into a smooth-working machine the many spare parts he has gathered together by trade and purchase.

If the Western teams are stronger and anywhere near the strength of the three Eastern contingents—the Macks, Yanks and Nats—it looks as though there might be a close American League race for a change. For the Westerners will knock off the contending team occasionally and revive the interest which was lost when the Yankees and then the A's started dominating the league.

But this is a moot question at this writing. It should be answered within the next two weeks, though, for by that time the Western teams will have completed their first Eastern invasion, and will have been thoroughly tested by all of the entrants in this sector.

Reds Defeat Braves On Double in 12th, 9-8

Cincinnati, May 7 (A.P.).—With two out and two on in the twelfth, Ernest Lombardi cracked his third double of today's game against the Boston Braves and the Cincinnati Reds won, 9 to 8.

Hargraves' triple in the Braves half of the same inning, following doubles by Worthington and Maranville, marked a three run drive that shot the Bostonians into apparently sure victory. It seemed more sure as Heath, first Red at bat, filed out. Then High, up for Durocher, walked, Roettger filed, Douthit walked, Morrissey was safe on an error and Heilmann, batting for Crabtree, singled, bringing one in, then Lombardi batted in the tying and winning runs.

Phils Defeat Pirates In Wild First Inning

Pittsburgh, May 7 (A.P.).—A walk, a wild pitch, a triple and double and three Pirate errors in the first inning gave Philadelphia a clean sweep of the two-game series with Pittsburgh, 5 to 3 today.

The Phils scored four runs in the opening frame. Klein hit the triple and Hurst doubled. Chagnon held Philadelphia to one hit in the last six innings, but the Pirates could not overcome the lead.

Dave Barbee saved the Pirates from a whitewashing with two ringing triples in the second and fourth innings. It was Pittsburgh's fourth straight loss and ninth defeat in the last ten games.

Blaeholder, of Browns, Shuts Out Red Sox, 4-0

Boston, May 7 (A.P.).—George Blaeholder held the Red Sox to nine scattered hits today as the St. Louis Browns made it three straight from the Collins men. The score was 4 to 0.

Led by Irving Burns, who made four straight hits, the Browns kept pecking away at the offerings of Jack Russell until they forced his retirement in the sixth. Altogether they made 14 hits, 12 off Russell and 2 off Durham.

C. U. DEFEATS ST. JOE ON TRACK

Five Records Beaten, Three Tied as Cards Cop.

FIVE Catholic University stadium records toppled and fell yesterday, and three more were equaled while the Cardinal track team was defeating St. Joseph's, of Philadelphia, 75 5-6 to 50 1-6.

Vincent Fraatz, of Catholic, was the chief offender yesterday, breaking established marks in the 120 and 220 yard hurdles. Fraatz finished second in the high jump and second in the broad jump, to take the meet's high scoring honors, 16.

Close behind him was Steve Slezak, husky St. Joseph's events man, who won three firsts—in the shot-put, the discus and javelin. He broke the old stadium discus mark of 122 feet 9½ inches with a 129 foot 5¼ inches heave. He equaled the standing record with his 43 feet 7 inches shot-put endeavor.

Two Records Fall to Fraatz.

Fraatz shaved 2-5 of a second off the 120-yard hurdle mark and 1-5 off the 220. Gayle McGuigan bettered the half-mile run mark by doing the two laps in 2:01 1-5, 1 1-5 seconds less than the old mark. It was 1-10 better than was accomplished at the stadium.

Howard Track Team Upset by Princeton

Princeton, N. J., May 7 (A.P.).—Resuming track and field relations after a six-year lapse, Princeton upset a highly favored Harvard team in Palmer Stadium today, 75½ to 59½.

One track record was smashed and five dual meet marks were bettered and one equalled.

Haskett Derby, Nassau sprinter, accounted for two of the meet marks when he ran the 440 yards in 48 3-5 seconds and the 220 yards in 24 seconds flat.

Pen Hallowell, of Harvard, indoor intercollegiate mile champion, set up a new track record of 4:18 2-5 for that distance and also won the half-mile in the fair time of 1:57 2-10.

VIC FRAZIER HAMMERED BY NATS

Homer, 2 Triples, 3 Doubles Figure in 7-2 Win.

lead in the first and another was added in the second, and yet it looked as though the Sox would get to him. Even after his mates gave him three more runs in the third, he was still not out of the woods, due to his wildness and occasional alien bingles. All told, he walked seven, and in four different innings he was in hot water.

Myer opened the game for the Nats with a triple to center and scored when Frasier was charged with a balk. This did not hurt the latter any, though, for the next three up, Manush, West and Cronin, singled, two markers resulting. At least another would have been coined but for Kress' hit-robbing catch at the expense of Joe Judge, the shortstop racing to center to make an overhead grab with his gloved hand at arm's length.

The runs did not look so big when, with an out separating them, Kress and Fothergill singled in the second. Then Appling coaxed a walk to fill the bases and a snappy double play, Cronin to Myer to Judge, helped Crowder out of this hole.

Manush Doubles Myer Home.

With two gone, Myer's single and Manush's double made the Nats 3 up and then the Sox threatened again. Frasier, first up in the third, drew a walk and, following Rothrock's hoist to Reynolds, successive singles by Seeds and Selph propelled the Sox pitcher over. Another walk filled the bases and the fans were sitting on the edges of their chairs and Frank Ragland was showing great action warming up in the bull pen, when Lu Blue went to the tee. He fouled to Spencer, however, and another rally was killed when Fothergill popped to Cronin in short left.

The lower half netted the Nats three more markers. Carl Reynolds started the scoring by crashing out his first homer of the season, a smashing drive high in the stands in left. Judge followed with a double and, after Bluege rolled to Selph, a double by Spencer and a single by Crowder accounted for two more runs.

Crowder walked two more in the fourth, but prevented any scoring, while the Nats used their half to add their final run of the game. It was manufactured from Manush's triple over Seeds' head and West's long fly.

Sox Threaten in Sixth, Seventh.

Fothergill's double opening the sixth was wasted and there was only one other threat over the balance of the route, it coming in the seventh, when the Sox scored their final run. With one gone, Seeds singled and Selph doubled him home. Crowder fanned Kress, but then stood in admiration watching Judge knock down Blue's drive instead of covering the sack. This put it up to Fothergill, who sent Manush far back for a liner.

In addition to his homer, Reynolds added a single to his record to keep him up among the league's leading hitters. Manush was high gun of the game, however, coming to life with a trio of safeties, including a triple and double. Myer also made his presence felt, slapping out a triple and single, while a great catch by Seeds robbed him of an other extra-baser. All of the other Nationals poked out one safety apiece.

and there is a possibility that he will make his 1932 debut today. If the arm still creaks after a workout before the game, "Sad Sam" Jones, with the Nats last year, likely will get the call.

The committee in charge of arrangements for the "Sam Rice" day yesterday decided to stage it on Tuesday, July 19, when Bucky Harris and the Detroit Tigers will be here on their second 1932 visit. No contributions will be asked of the fans, their gift being the purchase of tickets for the affair, which will be a gala occasion. The Washington Club has agreed to give all of the proceeds over above an average Tuesday crowd to the player.

Despite his wildness in his start against the Yankees last Tuesday, when he waked 12 men in less than seven innings, Pitcher Bob Burke has not lost caste with Manager Walter Johnson. "When Bob did get the ball over, the Yanks didn't hit it," said Johnson, "and I'm planning to give him another trial shortly. He's got a lot of stuff and, with a little more confidence in himself, should be a winning pitcher.

Myer, who opened Friday's game with a triple, gave an encore starting yesterday's fracas. It was the fifth consecutive game which he has opened by getting base-life.

Following Frasier's balk, the third called here in four games, which let Myer score from third, play was delayed fully five minutes while the Chisox put up a useless argument. It was not Frasier's fault that he balked, for Lu Blue stopped him during his wind-up because he thought Umpire Dinneen was in the wrong position on the infield.

Kress made one of the most brilliant catches seen here this season when he raced out to short center to grab a near Texas Leaguer at arm's length as the ball was sailing away from him over his head in the first. Had somebody covered second, West would have been doubled up.

Much of the Washington sticking effort has gone to Seeds in the last two games. The Sox center fielder had six chances Friday and six more yesterday.

Fothergill's double opening the sixth was the Sox's first extra baser of the game.

There were no strike-outs in the game until Crowder fanned Kress in the seventh.

Judge made a nice over-the-shoulder catch of Berry's foul in the eighth.

When Bluege scratched a single through McKain in the eighth, it gave every Nat at least one safety for the day.

WASHINGTON PILOTS IN VICTORY

Brewer Allows Black Sox 1 Hit to Win Opener, 3-0.

Special to The Washington Post.

BALTIMORE, Md., May 7.—Brewer held the Baltimore Black Sox to one hit today as the Washington Pilots blanked the locals, 3 to 0, in the opening game of the East-West Colored League.

The lone bingle came from the bat of Dick Lundy, manager and shortstop of the Black Sox. Only 29 men faced the visiting pitcher, who had eight strikeouts to his credit.

The Capital Club nicked Fuornoy for a dozen safeties, four being made by Mason, who batted a thousand.

Tomorrow the teams will meet in a double-header here.

Chisox Sign Freshman; College to Protest

San Francisco, May 7 (A.P.).—Declaring the Chicago White Sox had "snatched" Clarence Fieber, freshman pitcher, out of school, after only four months of college, University of San Francisco authorities today declared a formal protest would be filed with Judge Kenesaw M. Landis, commissioner of baseball.

Fieber was signed yesterday by a scout for the Chicago club. The 18-year-old mound sensation is slated to leave tonight to join the American League team.

$15,000 DIXIE WON BY GALLANT KNIGHT

Opinion was divided as to whether the horse or the jockey was to blame for his defeat. Mate held a prominent position for some six furlongs but seemed to slide out of the real contention on the trip up the backstretch.

Rigan McKinney appears to have made a paying investment when he bought Inception and retired the gelded son of Sporting Blood from the flat to install the horse as one of the Nation's best steeplechasers. Inception today won the Green Spring Valley Steeplechase, set a new track record of 3:44 1-5 and brought $3,040 to the account of the sportsman. Mrs. F. Ambrose Clark's Crumpler, an outsider in the betting, was second, and Beelzebub, the property of E. R. Bradley, third.

Willie Collins, who had the mount on Inception, seemed to have a world of confidence in his charge. He was content to let Cahanamore and then Silverskin set the pace for three quarters of the distance. When Inception, which had been fencing faultlessly, was called upon he found unexpected contention from one Crumpler. The latter took the lead away from Silverskin with a half swing to go and came over the last jump in front. But Inception's flat racing ability served him in good stead and he had no trouble pulling away to a half length victory in the run into the finish slot. There were no falls. Night Retreat was pulled up at the twelfth fence.

Maroon Furnishes Thrill In Late Rush.

Star Porter and Sonny Workman proved a winning combination in the second race, fashioned for 2-year-old maidens and named the Questionnaire. Workman took Star Porter to the front just after the barrier rise and from that point rode a confident race. Marooned furnished a thrill for the fans when he moved up to almost nip the leader at the wire.

Workman made it two in a row, taking the third, a sprint, with C. E. Grogan's Wise Count. Mexico was second, ahead of Voltagreen, the favorite. Wise Count, after delaying the start, made every post a winning one. Voltagreen made a determined effort rounding the stretch turn, but dropped back behind Mexico. Wise Count had a three-length advantage at the finish.

Bubola finally crashed into the season's winning circle and it took Johnny Gilbert to turn the trick in the fourth race. He had Bubola off fast, saved ground all the way and outrode V. Arthur, who had the mount on Jolly Pilot, the favorite. Workman brought Double O. up to take the third money.

Agee, Choice, Hopes to Set New Mark in K. C. Event.

Bill Greiner Carries Hopes of Washington Clubs.

NINETY-THREE crack distance runners will vie for honors in the District of Columbia 15-mile open marathon championship to be held today under the auspices of the Knights of Columbus. The start will be at a point one mile north of Mount Vernon. The course lies over the new Mount Vernon boulevard with the grind ending at the K. of C. Hall at Tenth and K streets northwest. It will start at 10 a. m.

It will be Bill Agee against the field today, for the wiry Baltimore runner is bent on hanging up a new mark for the distance. He has been training diligently for the race and is confident of negotiating the distance in 1 hour and 34 minutes. He will be opposed by athletes from this city, Baltimore, Philadelphia and New York.

Washington to Be Well Represented.

Washington will be well represented by men from the K. of C., Y. M. C. A., Potomac Boat Club and American Legion. Mike Lynch, veteran campaigner; Jerry Looney, George Shorb and Bus Nicholson are among those entered. The chief hopes for a local victory, however, rest on the broad shoulders of Bill Greiner. Greiner has recorded the fastest time of all local men in practice runs, and is ready for the best run of his career.

V. M. I. BEATS DUKE IN TENTH

Sensational Fielding Holds Score to 5 to 4.

LEXINGTON, Va., May 7 (A.P.).—Duke lost the second game of its Virginia invasion to V. M. I. today in ten innings. The score was 5 to 4.

Sensational fielding kept runs at a minimum, although base hits rattled from the bats of the two teams.

Turner, who opened the V. M. I. half of the tenth with a single, was advanced to second when Scott walked. Both runners advanced on Buford's sacrifice, and Turner scored a moment later on Pitkethley's hard-hit grounder.

Wild Pitch Lets V. M. I. Tie Score.

The Cadets counted twice in the second inning on Mason's timely single. Duke scored one run in each of the next three stanzas to take a momentary lead, but Ward scored in the fifth on a wild pitch to knot the count.

Waite's seventh inning home run gave the Cadets a one run lead, but the visitors evened the score in the following inning when Flohr, Duke's southpaw hurler, banged out his second home run of the game.

Central Plays Tech In Series Tuesday

The high school baseball series wends its way near the finish line this week when Central plays Tech Tuesday afternoon at Eastern Field. the only remaining game on the schedule is the playing of the postponed Eastern-Western tussle, to be staged Tuesday of next week.

Central is a strong favorite to beat Tech Tuesday and finish out its series season with a record of three wins and one loss. If Western managed to beat Eastern, this would produce a tie for first place, but the Easterners seem fated to defeat Western and by doing so establish sovereignty over high school baseball for the fifth consecutive year.

A heated race has developed in the Prep School Tennis League, with Friends, Georgetown Prep and Gonzaga virtually deadlocked for the first place position. Georgetown Prep is the defending champion.

Episcopal Bows, 5-4, To Augusta Cadets

Augusta Military Academy, Va., May 7.—The Augusta baseball team added the fourteenth to a long string of victories by defeating the Episcopal High School team of Alexandria here, 5—4. The game was nip and tuck throughout its length as the score testifies. E. H. S. tied the score four-all in the eighth and Augusta retaliated in the same frame by scoring the winning run. Credit for the winning run went to Sutton who scored Klutz with his only hit of the day. The latter hit safely, however, three of the five times that he faced Barnes. The E. H. S. moundsman, Barnes, credited himself with the tying run in the seventh by a home run to deep center, one of the two that were hit, the other being by Pinner of Episcopal. Sutton, the local strike out ace, retired four of the six batsmen that faced him in the eighth and ninth innings.

Six Records Fall as Middies Score, 69 to 57.

WILLIAMSBURG, Va., May 7 (A.P.).—Six records were shattered this afternoon as the Naval Academy trackmen turned in a well-earned 69-to-57 victory over the William and Mary track team.

Prince Georges County Nines Facing Active Week

SCHOLASTIC and independent baseball teams of Prince Georges County face a busy round of activities this week. The schoolboys will continue play in the second round of the county championship series, while a full card is listed for the sandlotters today. Suburban Church League nines will play Saturday.

Featuring today's program is the contest between the Landover and Lanham nines on the latter's field at 3 o'clock. Both teams are gunning for the Prince Georges County championship and a lively battle is anticipated. Huck Beall will hurl for Landover and Herb Brickerd for Lanham.

Hyattsville All-Stars have listed a game with Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company today on the Riverdale field at 3 o'clock. Hyattsville won its opener last Sunday against Landover.

Dixie Pig A. C. will travel to Front Royal, Va., to engage the nine of that place. Lefty Jones will be on the firing line for the Dixies, who have copped both their starts to date. Members of the team will meet at the barbecue stand at Bladensburg at 11 o'clock.

Mount Rainier A. C. will hold a practice game on the District line field at 3 o'clock against an opponent to be announced.

Dor-A seniors have scheduled Clifton Barbers, of Washington, for a game to be played on the Hyattsville High School field at 3 o'clock. It will be the final contest for Dor-A before starting its Capital City League schedule next Saturday against Miller Furniture Co., of Washington. The latter game will officially open the loop, sponsored by The Post.

Four games are carded in the county scholastic title series Friday afternoon, two in upper section play and two in the southern end of the county. The contests will mark near-completion of the second round. The regular schedule will be completed next week, with intersection playoffs the following week.

In the game promising the liveliest fireworks, Hyattsville High will meet Maryland Park at Maryland Park. The latter defeated Hyattsville in a first-round tilt and at present is tied with Mount Rainier for leadership in the upper group at three wins against one loss. Hyattsville has won one and lost twice, but is improving rapidly and figures on defeating Maryland Park and Mount Rainier next week to deadlock the series.

In other contests Friday Mount Rainier will face Laurel at Laurel in another upper section game, while Baden will meet Oxon Hill at Oxon Hill and Brandywine will clash with Upper Marlboro at Upper Marlborough.

Hyattsville Episcopal and Colesville Methodists and Hyattsville Methodists and Presbyterians will meet in a Suburban Church League double-header Saturday afternoon on the Hyattsville High School diamond.

Hyattsville High has two contests slated this week aside from its county title game.

Woodward School, of Washington, will be entertained Tuesday afternoon on the Hyattsvillee field, while on Wednesday the Blue and Gold will travel to Alexandria to face Episcopal High.

Blacksburg, Va., May 7 (A.P.).—V. P. I.'s nine made it two straight over Emory and Henry tossers here today defeating the Wasps, 13 to 7.

Marshall scored Humphries with a drive to right and Ramsey doubled to add two more tallies. V. P. I. came back with four tallies and the winning runs in the same inning on four hits and a walk and batted around again in the eighth to add four more runs.

Maryland Lacrosse Team Defeats St. John's, 5 to 2

7,000 See Old Liners Down Rivals and Strengthen Claim to Olympic Berth; Pugh Scores 2 Goals.

MARYLAND'S lacrosse team advanced a step closer the national championship and the right to represent the United States in the Los Angeles Olympics by downing its old rival, St. John's, of Annapolis, 5 to 2, here this afternoon before a crowd of 7,000.

It was the sixth victory in as many starts this season for the Old Line stick wielders, who have scored 53 goals to 6 for their opponents. Washington College, Georgia, Georgia Tech., Virginia and Rutgers had bowed before Maryland's attack previous to today's clash. St. John's, 1931 national title holder, had won five straight contests this season.

Penn State, Johns Hopkins and Navy remain on Maryland's schedule, all away from home.

The Johnnies scored first after five minutes but the Terrapins came right back to count three goals before the first half ended to lead, 3 to 1, at the intermission. In the second half, the Old Liners again outscored the visitors 2 to 1.

Doug Ramsay, St. John's in-home, opened the scoring when he "golfed" a shot near the crease. The ball was loose on the ground following a drive from MacCartee, second attack, that Goalie Invernezzi had turned aside.

Eleven minutes later Gordon Pugh, Maryland's all-American center, evened the score at 1-all by taking a short pass from "Skippy" Faber, in-home and hurling the ball past Lamotte, St. John's goal keeper, at a distance of about ten yards.

Maryland went to the front after 21 minutes of play when Ed Ronkin, first attack, dodged past Phil Lotz and fired the ball point-blank past Lamotte. It was a clever piece of footwork.

The longest goal of the game came one minute before the intermission as Jack Norris, second defense, on a screen play, heaved a 40-yard drive that bounded into the Johnny net. The point gave the Old Liners a 3-to-1 lead at the half.

Pugh scored his second goal of the game four minutes after the start of the second half. He pivoted and made a short throw of 15 feet for the point.

St. John's second and final point of the contest was registered by Bill Ziegler, third attack, after 18 minutes. The goal followed his team's first tally by 43 minutes, a superb exhibition of defense play by the Old Liners having been displayed.

Maryland's fifth and last point was scored by Norwood Sothorn, sophomore, third defense player, who dodged three adversaries to obtain a direct shot at the net with seven minutes to play.

Freddie Invernezzi, Maryland goal keeper, was a thorn in St. John's attack, stopping many accurate drives. Nicholson at cover point also played a brilliant defensive game. Pugh was the only player to score two goals.

Virginia Hunt Feature to Melita

Gelding Gives Owner Second Leg on Gold Cup.

Scores by Furlong; Silvery Jim Next, Ostend Third.

Special to The Washington Post.

WARRENTON, Va., May 7.—Running a beautifully timed race, Jack Skinner, of Middleburg, finished first on Melita, a bay gelding, owned by the Flying Horse Farms, in the Virginia Gold Cup Race today.

Melita was held in restraint for two-thirds of the way around the 4-mile course; but in the last third, Skinner let the bay gelding go and he went to the front easily and stayed there, finishing an easy winner by more than a furlong. Duncan Read's Silvery Jim, ridden by the owner, took second in a close finish from Mrs. Frank Gould's Ostend, with William B. Street up.

Six horses were scratched, leaving seven to face the starter. Ranny Duffy, on Bulgold, the H. R. Bishop entry, was the first to go down, at the fifth fence. Barleycorn, the choice, was pulled up on the second lap around the course. Grenadier Guard, Mrs. Somerville's brown gelding, set the pace during the early part of the race, with Silvery Jim in close pursuit.

Crowd of 10,000 Sees Classic.

An estimated crowd of 10,000 sweltered under a real summer sun to watch the running of the race. The win today of Jack Skinner gives the Flying Horse Farms a second leg on the cup, as their Soissons, a starter today, won the event in 1930, also with Skinner up.

The results of the noon races were: Warrenton Hunt Cup, a 3½-mile journey across country, was won by Mrs. T. W. Durant's Fugitive, with R. G. Duffy in the saddle. Second place in this race went to Halo, owned and ridden by Lewis Stuyvesant, with Slaughten Boy, owned by Walter Bowes and ridden by Charles Castleman, of Leesburg, third. Six jumpers started in this race, and three finished.

The North Wales Cup, a 2½-mile jaunt over brush, went to William Almy's William Kennett, with the owner up. Lewis Stuyvesant's chestnut mare How Divine was second, and Mrs. Thomas P. Somerville's Palm Off third.

Front Royal, Va., May 7.—Randolph-Macon Academy defeated Swavely today by a score of 2 to 1. York and Rudacill hooked up in a pitching duel, York allowing two hits and striking out twelve men, while Rudacill allowed three hits and struck out seven. Casarotti hit in the ninth to decide the game as he singled sharply over second with two out and the winning run on third. McFall got the only extra-base hit, his double eluding the center fielder and he completed the circuit.

Forced-In Run Wins For William and Mary

Richmond, Va., May 7 (A.P.).—Darden, Richmond relief pitcher, lost his control in the tenth inning today and walked in the run that gave William and Mary College a 7-to-6 victory.

The Spider twirler, who had been almost invincible after relieving White in the fourth frame, started the tenth by walking Demarest and Marks. Stankus, rival moundsman, beat out a scratch hit to the infield, filling the bases, and Darden then walked Demarest to force in the winning run.

Going into the ninth inning three runs behind, Richmond tied the score on a pair of hits, a walk and an error.

Old Fighters Rougher and Tougher

Didn't Call Off Bouts on Slight Pretexts of Injuries.

Mickey Walker One of Old Guard; Many Stars "Babied."

By ROBERT EDGREN.

I SEE Mickey Walker went into his fight with King Levinsky with an elegant black eye presented Mickey by a sparring partner. Mickey said the black eye was an asset, as it put him in a good humor for fighting. They used to say all Mickey needed to be in fighting trim was a shave and a hair cut. Now he adds a black eye.

It was Packey McFarland who used a hair cut to get a little ferocity into his fighting. Packey had his long hair clipped close just before he fought Leach Cross in New York, and the clipping made handsome Packy look like an old-time bare-knuckle prize fighter. His head was covered with scars from the rocks bounced on it in kid gang fights in the Chicago packing house district where Packey grew up.

"Fitz" Liked to Enter Ring With Black Eye.

Bob Fitzsimmons used to like to go into a fight with a black eye received in training. It made him feel rough. Bob had a black eye and a cut lip when he went into the ring to fight Jim Corbett for the world's championship.

Dempsey was rough in training, and he started several of his fights with a black eye or cut eyebrow from the training camp. He offered to fight Billy Miske standing on one leg when he had some torn ligaments in his left ankle and couldn't walk on it. Jim Jeffries once wanted to postpone a fight because a bear had bitten a few holes through his calf and the thing seemed to be infected, but promoter Jim Coffroth talked him out of it.

Things are different now. Promoters have a lot of trouble with fights called off a day or two before the show, when it is too late to get a satisfactory substitute. Fighters are becoming tender and timid. A sneeze is the flu. A sore knuckle is a broken hand. Two months after his fight with Stribling, Max Schmeling called off his contract to fight Carnera. His explanation was that he had an infected eye caused by a jab Willie delivered with his thumb in an early round at Toledo. But big Carnera had not yet been tried out and there was a suspicion that Schmeling's managers weren't any too anxious to risk the title. They must have felt foolish when they saw what Sharkey did to Carnera. Max could have spotted Carnera an eye and retained his title. Well, maybe he could.

Too Many Doctors on Job For Wykoff.

Even amateur athletes are beginning to crack up under the strain of training and competition. Before any big dual meet the cripple list reads like a football hospital report. Frankie Wykoff is the world's greatest sprinter, but when he won only by inches in the 100-yard dash in a recent meet his coach pulled him right out of the 220 and it was explained that Frankie had a sore back, and a strained ankle, and a dizzy feeling in his head, and a pulled muscle in his calf, and really wasn't quite in shape to run a second race that day.

The day following the newspapers carried a story that the doctors had examined Frankie and found him suffering also from a hip injury, probably received while trying to do a running broad jump in his high school days, and he would have to lay up and be very careful, and couldn't possibly compete any more until the Olympic games tryouts without risk of being crippled all his life. Next week Frankie won the 100 and the 220 yard dashes in another dual meet, with easier competition, and every one was much puzzled about it and wondered why he didn't at least limp a bit as he hit the tape. But he was running beautifully and unofficial watches held by two coaches of rival college teams caught him in 9.5 in the 100, although the official time was slower. Probably nobody told Frankie he was sick that day. It's a wonder the boy ever runs so fast, kept wrapped in cotton the way he is.

Wykoff Pulled Tendon Before 1928 Olympics.

But since the Olympic games four years ago there has been a constant fear that Frankie would crack up for some reason or other.

The truth about his 1928 performance, when he showed hardly a trace of his usual speed at Amsterdam, never has been told before. Here it is:

Wykoff won the 100 meters Olympic trials at Cambridge in wonderful style. In each of the four heats he equaled the record of 10.6 seconds. This was a considerable strain on his vitality, but in the opinion of Head Coach Lawson Robertson was merely a temporary one.

After his four hard races on Saturday he left for Brooklyn on Sunday, preparatory to sailing for Amsterdam with the team. His high school coach, N. C. Nayhurst, took him down to public schools athletic field near Brighton Beach. This was on Monday, and with Johnnie McHugh firing the pistol, Frankie took eight or nine starts, and in doing so he suffered a pulled tendon in his thigh.

"Ignorant and suicidal," Coach Robertson said of this method of preparation. "After the hard strain of Saturday Wykoff never should have been allowed to indulge in such severe training." The result was kept a secret from Robertson. Wykoff did very little training on the way across and probably did so advisedly. The day after the team arrived in Amsterdam Charlie Paddock went to Robertson and said: "I suppose you know that Wykoff has gained seven or eight pounds. and also that he pulled his tendon in Brooklyn before he left."

Out of Condition Because Of Injury.

The coach said: "Well, why wasn't I advised of this before? Why do you come to me now, and why didn't Wykoff apprise me of the facts?" Paddock said: "Well, you know, he was afraid to tell you because the final selections for competitors in the hundred meters had not been made until several days after the team sailed, and he was afraid he would not be selected."

So Wycoff was entirely out of condition due to injury and the lay-off on the boat, and not because he had stuffed himself at meal times—the published alibi for his lack of running form. Of course, he expected to be all right. But after arriving in Amsterdam, when Robertson had been told of his condition, Wykoff was unable to do the right kind of training to bring himself to his Cambridge condition. He had been entered, and it was too late to do anything about it.

And probably that is why Coach Cromwell is being so very careful just now, and suspects a pulled tendon or a strained ankle or a wrenched hip. After all a sprinting champion like Wykoff, lightly built and all nerves, is a fragile bit of bric-a-brac and has to be taken care of. But I don't think they ought to have the doctors look him over every few days and discover something they think has gone wrong with his running mechanism. After a while he'll begin to believe them, and then he'll naturally slow down. Doctors remind me of a hypnotist I saw once working on a big, husky black boy named "Slick." The hypnotist put Slick under the influence, whatever that is, and said, "Slick, your arms are paralyzed. You can't lift your hands high enough to take off your hat." Poor Slick struggled until the sweat ran down his face, but he couldn't lift his hands above his shoulders. He wasn't paralyzed, but he thought he was.

Paddock Did Not Mind Minor Handicaps.

Of course there are athletes and athletes. A rugged guy like Paddock probably ran better when he had a sore heel, because it made him mad to think he might lose a race. A kink in the calf, to Paddock was like having a black eye going into the ring for Fitzsimmons.

Give me an athlete who is rough and thinks he can't be hurt. Jim Hogan played four years of Yale football and was in every minute of every game. He thought any player who limped was quitting. He didn't see how a man could be hurt playing football. And there was a big football player named Girzikowsky once who took up hammer throwing. In his first competition he got his feet tangled and couldn't let go, and the wire hammer handle wrapped around him and tied his arms to his sides and the 16-pound lead ball hit him in the middle o the back so hard it knocked him down flat on his nose. We rushed to untangle him and pick him up, hoping his back wasn't broken. Girzikowsky spit the gravel out of his mouth, grabbed the hammer, stepped back into the ring and heaved the weight 10 feet farther than any of his practice throws.

3 Capital City League Tennis Matches Today

Edgewood and Veterans Bureau two of the strongest teams in the Capital City Tennis League meet this morning at Friends School courts. At the same time, Wardman Park's team will play the Filipino Club.

Clairmont and Pan Americans play at Potomac Park in the other league fray.

Matches start at 9:30 o'clock.

SPEAKING OF TENNIS

By BOB CONSIDINE

CLOSE to precipice of the fateful forties, good old Bill Tilden makes his final appearance of the year here today at Wardman Park Hotel in the same old rampaging style which has made him the most amazing figure tennis ever produced.

Facing him across the traditional fishing net will be Karel Kozeluh, the very soul of the professional game, while in the background will be the remaining half of the four-cornered great professional group—Hans Nusslein and Roman Najuch.

Those people who marvel at the way in which Jim Londos can defend his own particular world's wrestling championship seven nights out of eight, should not overlook Tilden when they are basking in the thought of supermen. I don't think there is much doubt that Tilden absorbs as much, if not a little more, actual punishment playing an average match of top-flight tennis than Londos does meeting a friendly member of his mat tribe.

Tilden Under Strain.

In a five-set match, such as Tilden and Kozeluh put on last year at Wardman, there is no comparison between the strain imposed upon Tilden and that imposed upon Londos. To run, come to grinding stops, leap, hop and sprint around the court such as Tilden is forced to do in meeting a man as steady as Kozeluh, and do this sometimes for nearly three hours, during which time he must cover in the neighborhood of 12 to 15 miles, takes stamina far beyond the ken of the average follower of sports.

Kozeluh was reduced to a bundle of cramps last year in the Tilden match at Wardman. He collapsed several times while making rib-straining runs for Tilden's shots. That last year's match was a sports classic, and today's should be no letdown. Indeed it is Tilden who seems actually to be the underdog today, for Kozeluh beat him 7—5, 6—1 the only time they have played this year—that being last Saturday in Cincinnati.

For one, I am anxious to see Hans Nusslein, who seems fated to take Tilden's place when the superb legs of the Great Man finally begin to lose their speed. Full of beer muscles and a bland indifference to the caliber of tennis he suddenly has been transplanted into, Nusslein is said to be a real genius in the rough. Unknown eighteen months ago, today he is professional champion of Europe, and possesses even the slightly bald scalp of Tilden himself upon his hefty belt.

The admission prices are in keeping with these hectic times. General admission is 75 cents, reserved stands $1.50 and box seats $2. Play starts at 2:30, when Nusslein plays Najuch. A doubles match, bringing together all four boys, will cap the day's play.

In tennis there is an expression known as "traveling the loop." It concerns, mainly, the itinerary taken by some of our better-known tennis bums, starting with the Canadian indoor championship, in January, and ending with the national singles, in September, during which the boys are wont to live off the fatheads of the land.

In our own small, and much more amateur, way, we have a loop in this region. It starts May 18 with the Old Dominion championships, at the Country Club of Virginia, in Richmond. Following this, on June 3-4, there are the Hotchkiss Cup matches, this year at Norfolk. The Maryland State championship, which annually gives local players a chance to play on grass, is run off the week of June 6. June 20 sees the Maryland State women's tournament, on grass at Baltimore. White Sulphur, and the West Virginia State tournament, follows July 18.

Quite a few go to the Virginia State, July 25, at Hot Springs, and to the Western Maryland tournament, at Mountain Lake Park, August 8.

Locally, this season, the tournament dates are as follows: City of Washington (men's singles, doubles, women's singles, mixed doubles), May 18-22, at Rock Creek public courts; Women's District League (singles and doubles), June 8-12; Middle Atlantic men's doubles, June 23-25, at Columbia Country Club; Army singles and doubles, at Army-Navy Country Club, June 27-July 2; District of Columbia championship (men's singles and doubles), Wardman Park Tennis Club, July 2-10; Army-Navy-Leech Cup matches, Army-Navy Club, July 16; public parks championships (men's and women's singles and doubles), on the four sets of public courts, July 23-30; women's District championship, Columbia Country Club, August 1-7; Capital City League tournament, public courts, August 21-27; Wardman Park Hotel invitation (men's singles and doubles, women's singles), at Wardman, September 10-18; Suburban League tournament, September 17-24, at Argyle.

For the kids there is the usual sparse fare. The District boys' and juniors' will be held at Wardman Park June 11-18. Wardman probably will sponsor another tournament such as was held last year when Jay Cohn, national junior champion, and several others participated. Girls' tennis, once again, is totally neglected, a sorry commentary on the interest our tennis fathers and mothers provide.

DROP SHOTS.

Dooly Mitchell is now an assistant prof at Georgetown . . . Wardman may put in Har-Tru courts next year . . . Najuch is one of the richest tennis players, owning a string of German sporting goods stores . . . The German Ambassador and the Czechoslovak Minister will attend today's matches . . . For all his years as an amateur, Tilden is an astute business man . . . Tilden's only meeting with Vines, in 1930, resulted in a 9—7, 6—3 win for the Philadelphian . . . The Chevy Chase team in the Women's District Tennis League has added life to that circuit . . . Maj. Georges Thenault is hobbling with a pulled tendon.

Georgetown Netmen Bow to N. Y. U., 8-1

Special to The Washington Post.

New York, May 7.—New York University's tennis team won their eighth contest today, defeating Georgetown, 8 to 1. It was the third loss of the season for the Hilltoppers. After Dooly Mitchell had defeated Sidney Berger, of N. Y. U., in the opening singles match, 6—2, 7—5, Hilltop victories were ended as the other eight matches went to the Violet netters.

Three of the matches went to three sets. Harold Gerkin, N. Y. U., forgot his first-set loss to Walt Berberich to go on to win 6—2, 6—4. In the doubles, Crowley and Berberich extended Underwood and Swayze to three sets, and Ferguson and Doyle lost the longest match of the afternoon to Bottari and Seligson, 10—8, 2—6, and 11—9.

St. John's Golf Team Defeats Devitt, 5 to 1

St. John's turned back Devitt, 5-1, in a Prep School League golf match played over the East Potomac Park course yesterday. The match was closely contested but the Cadets held the upper hand all the way. Ruane defeated Richards, 4 and 2, and Staney won over J. Baer, 2 up in the first foursome. Best ball was won by the Saints, one up. Ortman scored over Childs, 5 and 4, to continue the eventual winners' string in the second foursome, but Al Baer nosed out O'Leary on the eighteenth hole to earn Devitt's only point of the match. Best ball went to St. John's, one up.

From Tee to Green

Henry Litchfield West~

When I wake up on Sunday morn
And sadly notice it is raining,
I rise and dress with soul forlorn,
And spend the day in mild complaining

For Sunday is the only day
When I am free to go a-playing;
So do you wonder that I pray
That not indoors I will be staying.

I care not if it rains all week,
Beginning with tomorrow, Monday;
The only happiness I seek
Is that it will not rain on Sunday.

EVERY man has, or ought to have, a spirit of fun in his heart, even if he belongs to the class designated by Shakespeare as "most grave and reverend seigniors." Consequently, it is worth something to get away once in a while from the cares and worries of business life and devote several hours to real enjoyment—to be glad to be a boy again just for today. The point of the story is that no sport but golf lends itself to such novel recreation. Who ever heard of tennis, baseball or football players getting together and reveling in a lot of fool stunts?

Last week on the course of the Columbia Club there was a unique occasion which only a golf club could duplicate. There were gathered together more than a hundred professional and business men, prominent and influential in their respective lines, who for the entire day were like a company of overgrown boys.

Costumes of All Kinds Given Out.

Immediately upon entering the clubhouse they were given costumes of all descriptions and not one, no matter how dignified he might be on ordinary occasions, declined to array himself in some kind of masquerade attire. Some fifteen or twenty were in women's dresses, and some of the younger members with their youthful faces slightly rouged and their heads covered with blonde wigs were really most attractive in appearance. Nor did they seem in the least embarrassed when they emerged from the clubhouse and received an applauding welcome from women members of the club gathered on the upper porch.

No one but a dyed-in-the-wool golfer would be willing to adopt the disguise of Aunt Jemima, as did Frank S. Appleman, the well-known patent attorney, or appear as an English coster, as did John W. Martin, the chief clerk of the War Department. Carl J. Quentell was difficult to recognize in his Chinese dress; Ralph A. Shepard, of the Treasury Department, was a Mexican with a piratical black mustache; and another member, his countenance hidden by a false face, was a replica of the little demons who advertise a brand of chewing gum. Even Fred McLeod and D'Arcy Banagan, the professional and assistant professional, did not hesitate about donning dresses and lovely wigs, while George R. Holmes, of the International News Service, bearded like Sousa in his younger days, flourished a baton as he led a band of colored musicians. Holmes, by the way, wrote a song for the occasion, entitled "Carry Me Back to Old Columbia," with all the members trying to sing it, but the band, despite Holmes' energetic leadership, would persist in playing the music like a dirge. Paul Y. Anderson, winner of a Pulitzer journalistic prize, attired in a suit life Joseph's coat of many colors, wrote an oration which he delivered amid great applause.

Good Fellowship of Game Responsible.

It is worth while to repeat that all this would hardly have happened except among a crowd of golfers. There is something in the atmosphere of the game, something in the companionship and good fellowship which golf evokes, which makes such fantastic revelry possible. Of course, no one who participated would have appeared in public in such comic regalia, but out on the first tee and on the course—the whole picture was in harmony with the surroundings. A list of all who were costumed would read like a Washington "Who's Who," but for the time being all rank and station were forgotten and everybody joined in having a good time.

So there is something in golf besides driving, approaching and putting and jotting down figures upon an unoffending and helpless score card.

The golf committee of the Washington Golf and Country Club announces that the decision to eliminate an invitation tournament this year gives the committee the opportunity to make the club more enjoyable to its members. It is planned to hold more Saturday and holiday intraclub events and to have the prizes larger.

The Woodmont Club, which also abandoned its invitation tournament this year, has followed this policy, providing a program which offers competition on every Sunday during the season. The importance and value of giving club members an interesting schedule for their enjoyment is being more and more appreciated by every club.

Robert H. Harlow, tournament manager of the Professional Golfers' Association of America, has written to A. L. Houghton, the Kenwood professional, saying that he hopes the championship event of the association can be staged here next year. It is one of the most important features on the national program.

Hopes to Get P. G. A. Event For Washington.

Houghton purposes to do everything in his power to locate the tournament on some Washington course and has already conferred with H. A. Mihills, president of the Indian Spring Club, on the subject. Indian Spring would be glad to hold the event but it is realized, of course, that considerable financial obligation is involved, as a guarantee fund of at least $10,000 is required. Future events will decide as to the possibility of securing the tournament for this section.

Two golfers were happy last week when on the Congressional course William J. McEvoy scored a 76, his lowest score, and Walter P. Skinker also scored 76 on Columbia. It may be different when summer rules are in force.

Somewhere in the Bible is a verse which says that pride goeth before destruction and a haughty spirit before a fall. Its truth was illustrated last week in a four-ball match on the course of the Washington Golf and Country Club, when T. L. Moody and Ross Colwell were playing against Charles G. Duganne and Charles Cherry.

On the fifteenth hole, when Moody and Colwell were 2 down, and Moody was in the ditch from the tee and Colwell was in the farther ditch on his second, Duganne spied Ralph Drain walking down the fourteenth fairway. "Ask us how we stand?" he shouted triumphantly to Drain.

And then what happened? Colwell, playing out of the ditch without penalty, won the fifteenth, and the sixteenth also went to his side. On the seventeenth, Moody pitched close to the pin for a birdie 3 and a win, giving his side 1 up, whereupon, standing on the eighteenth tee, he shouted loudly into the empty air, "Ask us how we stand?"

Moody and Colwell capped the climax by winning the eighteenth also, four holes in a row. There's many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip.

Spring Stag Party May 21 At Manor.

The Manor Club has selected Saturday, the 21st, for its spring stag party, and promises a delightful entertainment. The Manor Club, by the way, only needs 50 more members to bring its membership list up to the full quota of 600.

Gen. R. H. Allen was the winner of the low medal score in the month of April tournament of the seniors' association at Chevy Chase, with Walter Peter as runner-up. Gen. D. C. Shanks won the low putting score, with Judge E. K. Campbell runner-up.

The pairings in the Morven Thompson Memorial Cup contest are as follows:

Gen. R. H. Allen (2) vs. Col. G. M. Wesson (8). Col. E. A. Hickman (6) vs. Capt. E. S. Kellogg (9). Walter G. Peter (1) vs. Capt. H. G. Gillmore (13). Admiral C. B. McVey (7) vs. Dr. Loren B. T. Johnson (5). Gen. C. C. Treat (3) vs. Col. Edward Clifford (7). Gen. D. C. Shanks (15) vs. Leroy Eakin (8). C. V. Wheeler (7) vs. Capt. C. A. McKay (9). Admiral H. R. Stanford (9) vs. B. O. Wagenhorst (6).

A handicap tournament under the auspices of the Maryland State Golf Association will be held all day next Tuesday on the course of the Manor Club. Prizes will be awarded for low gross and low net in three classes, but only players with 1932 Maryland State handicap cards will be eligible.

J. J. Oulahan, playing with Harry Hunter, scored an eagle 2 on the thirteenth hole of the Indian Spring course last week. He used a mashie niblick for his second shot.

Peacock Promises to Be Real Contender.

A real contender for the Middle Atlantic championship, to be played at Columbia during the first week in June, and for the District amateur championship, promises to be Roger Peacock, of the Indian Spring Club and now student at Duke University, if he continues with the game he has been playing during the spring season. He is the captain of his golf team and has twice defeated Billy Howell, besides winning the North Carolina intercollegiate golf championship from Allan Smith, the title-holder. In the medal score play-off after 36 holes had ended in a tie, Peacock scored 67 over the 6,647-yard course of the Sedgefield Country Club. In his last seven rounds he had four cards under 70 and nothing over 71. He is now one of the outstanding golfers in the Southern circuit.

The increasing number of golf players and automobiles is making the parking problem at many of the clubs a serious one.

Last week the Kenwood club began the conversion of a large area of lawn east of the third tee into additional accommodation for cars and the board of governors of Indian Spring has already given serious consideration to the congestion at that club. At present, on good-weather days, the automobiles stretch along the roadway from the clubhouse to Colesville pike, a long distance away. There is, however, plenty of additional space which can be utilized after some reconstruction. The Manor Club, which is also experiencing a crowded condition, may find a solution by using space vacated by the removal of the golf shop.

The Congressional, Army-Navy and Columbia clubs seem to be amply provided for but at the Washington Club the automobiles spread out into the Glebe road and into a field adjacent to the clubhouse.

Maier Again Heads Beaver Dam Golf Committee.

The new golf committee at the Beaver Dam Club consists of M. H. Maier, reelected chairman; William H. White, G. S. James, D. G. Morris, L. S. Hopkins, J. S. Baggett, R. M. Brown, F. Hendricks, and M. F. McCarthy.

The members of the Army-Navy Club deserved all the commendation bestowed upon them last week for the success which attended the spring invitation golf tournament. Although it was the initial event of its kind in the history of the club, so that the golf committee approached it with the emotions of a new discoverer, all the details of management had been thoroughly anticipated and the affair was handled with machine-like precision.

A large proportion of the credit is due to the golf committee, headed by Col. R. M. Danford, U S. A., and his chief assistant, Maj. H. K. Pickett, U. S. M. C., who discharged their multitudinous duties most efficiently. The score board was handled by Lionel Walker, the professional. Fortunately good weather prevailed during the tournament. A pleasant feature of the week was the luncheon tendered by the golf committee to the officers and executive committee of the District Golf Association, an event in thorough harmony with the well-known hospitality of the club.

Bradley Farms Is Scene of Horse Show This Week

Juvenile Exhibit at Preece Riding Club Is Prologue to National Capital Event—Mrs. Hoover Returns—Tea Dance at Spanish Embassy.

HORSE SHOW days and horse show weather are scheduled for this week. The juvenile horse show yesterday at the Preece Riding Club was a sort of prologue to the main show of the National Capital Horse Show at Bradley Farms, beginning on Wednesday. The Army Relief will have charge of the lunch and tea room for the benefit of their fund and the entries promise to make four days of keen enjoyment.

Mrs. Hoover returned last night from a little trip to Elmira, N. Y., and New Canaan, Conn., having left here Thursday night after a small dinner party and much receiving of Colonial Dames and other women's organizations, which indeed have continued almost steadily since April 1. In Elmira she was awarded the degree of honorary doctor of laws by Elmira College, after which she went on to New Canaan, where yesterday she attended the wedding of the daughter of her old friends, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Rickard, Miss Peggy Rickard, and Mrs. Graham Hoyt, of New York, which took place at noon. Mrs. Hoover was accompanied by her secretary, Mrs. Frederick Butler, and by Mrs. Stark McMullin, an old friend, who makes her home at the White House. The bride has been a frequent guest with her parents at the White House and at the camp on the Rapidan, where President and Mrs. Hoover have established a week-end retreat. She has made many friends here among the young people whom she has met at White House parties.

Mrs. Hoover will be away again next Saturday when she will receive from Wooster College, the much-coveted degree of doctor of humanities, which Wooster College has never before bestowed. Mrs. Hoover will go there for the historical pageant to be presented, in which her great-grandfather will be represented as one of the founders of the little town. She will be the guest of the town for the pageant and some other festivities, and many of Ohio's most distinguished citizens and officials will be there for the celebration.

MUCH interest is felt among old Washingtonians who figured in the administration of President Benjamin Harrison in the nomination last week of his grandson, William Henry Harrison 3d, in Indianapolis for Congress from that district. Mr. Harrison has already, in the few years he has made Indianapolis his home, served in the State Legislature and has run for the district attorneyship, for which he was defeated in the Democratic landslide several years ago. He attended school here, which he gave up to go into preparatory camp for the World War. His mother, Mrs. Russell B. Harrison, still lives here in the winters and his sister, Mrs. Marthena Harrison Williams, has a home in Chevy Chase, Md. Mr. Harrison married Miss Mary Newton, of Omaha, where he lived, in his mother's former home, for some years after the World War, and then went to live in his grandfather's and his father's old home. He has two charming children, William Henry 4th and little Mary. Mr. Harrison was born some years after the close of his grandfather's administration, so he was never a White House baby, as his cousin, Benjamin Harrison McKee, now of Paris, was. His district is conceded to be a strong Republican one, and there is every chance he will be in the next Congress.

The foreign visitors of the last week were extremely interesting ones, Senator Maurice Lippens, of Brussels, Belgium, and Mme. Lippens, who were guests at the Belgian Embassy; M. Michel Clemenceau, son of the great premier of France during the war, and Mme. Clemenceau; and at the end of the week the officers and midshipmen of the Spanish training ship, the Juan Sebastian Elcano, which lies in New York Harbor while its officers and men came to Washington for their visit. They were entertained at luncheon Friday at the Carlton by the Secretary of the Navy and the Navy Department, and in the afternoon the Spanish Ambassador gave a tea dance. The invitations called for a "leap year" tea and it was a charmingly informal party of, for the most part, young people. The wife of the ambassador has sailed for a visit to their home in Spain, so Senora de Irujo, wife of the Minister-Counselor of the embassy, acted as hostess, assisted by Senora Dona C. Archibald de Monreal, wife of the Naval Attache of the embassy; Senora Dona Teresa R. del Valle de Planell, wife of the Military Attache, and Senora Dona Larissa Rabinowitsch de Echegaray, wife of the Agricultural Attache of the embassy.

THE Spanish Embassy, one of the Sixteenth street buildings especially designed and built for foreign embassies and legations by the late Mrs. John B. Henderson, was particularly lovely with its decorations mainly of calla lilies and yellow roses. The patio was especially attractive with its border of green grass and plants surrounding the fountain. As the invitations indicated, it was strictly "informal." There was no receiving line, the guests just entered, but the wives of the attaches of the embassy saw to it that all the young officers and midshipmen met the young girls of the company, and there were no wallflowers except from choice. It was a pretty scene, with the handsome uniforms of the Spanish navy, all dark blue with brass buttons and gold trappings, and the diversified costumes of the girls and women, of chiffons, printed and otherwise; heavier clothes of crepe, with fur scarfs, delicate organdies and light silks, with small hats and large hats, floppy hats

The Congressional Club, 2001 New Hampshire avenue, entertained at tea Friday afternoon, when its guest of honor was Mr. Frank Branch Riley, who gave an illustrated lecture, "The Lure of the Great Northwest." This lecture is a witty travel story and delighted his audience.

Tea will be served in the quaint old-fashioned garden, lately a point of interest in the annual Virginia Garden Club pilgrimage and a meeting place for the twenty-fourth annual conference of governors recently convened in Virginia.

and smart perky stiff brims, of all colors and varieties.

There was dancing in the ball room and a buffet supper in the dining room and a buffet in the patio. Much English was spoken, much French and considerable Spanish, but all the Spanish officers and midshipmen spoke either English or French in addition to their native Spanish. It was a real test of the linguistic gifts of the American girls, and most of them were "weighed in the balance and not found wanting" in that matter. The American waltz and the Brazilian tango were the favorite dances and in these the young Spaniards were found to be very skilled. It was just a charming party. Many of the grown-ups were there throughout the afternoon. Among them were the Japanese Ambassador and Mme. Debuchi, the Peruvian Ambassador, the Belgian Ambassador and Mme. May and their daughter, Mlle. Francoise May; the Brazilian Ambassador and Senhora de Lima, the Mexican Ambassador and Senora de Puig, the Swiss Minister and Mme. Peter, the Hungarian Minister and his daughter, Countess Cornelia Szechenyi; the Austrian Minister and Mme. The senior "prom" of Catholic University held at Wardman Park Hotel on Friday, was perhaps the most successful affair that the school has given this year. Gayle McQuigan, of Panama, all to be graduated this year.

Historic Spots To Be Seen in Virginia Tour

Capital Branch of Antiquities Association to Make Pilgrimage May 17.

Fredericksburg and its interesting environs—where Presidents, generals and distinguished men and women from private and public life have played a part—is to be the center of interest for the pilgrimage on Tuesday, May 17, sponsored by the Washington Branch of the Association for the Preservation of Virginia Antiquities.

This association, with its headquarters in Richmond, was founded in Williamsburg, Va., January 4, 1888, and has as its sole interest the restoring and preserving of Virginia's most cherished landmarks, some of which are the historic part of Jamestown Island, where the old church tower stands; the Colonial Magazine at Williamsburg, the Mary Washington House at Fredericksburg and other spots significant in history. Of the 60 places of historic interest in Fredericksburg, 22 pertain to George Washington alone.

Its roll call of Presidents comprises Monroe, Madison, Jefferson, Jackson, Taylor, Lincoln, Arthur, Jefferson Davis, and, some say, John Adams, in going to and from his visits to Monticello. The roster of generals number seven, more than some States gave to the Revolution. Of the historic places to which the pilgrimage will lead none is of more interest than Rippon Lodge, the ancestral home of the Blackburns, now owned by Mr. Wade Hampton Ellis and named after the Blackburn home in the cathedral town at Rippon, England. Richard Blackburn's granddaughters, Ann and Jane Charlotte, married, respectively, John Bushrod and John Augustine Washington and resided at Mount Vernon, where they now are buried.

On the return trip, after visiting the Rising Sun Tavern, the Mary Washington House, Dr. Mercer's Pharmacy, Kenmore, the Sentry Box, the James Monroe House and law office, also Federal Hill and other interesting points in Freedricksburg, the last stop will be made at the Masonic Temple in Alexandria, opened especially for this occasion at 6 p. m. Miss Chinn, at Tabard Inn, is assisting in the arrangements.

More than $2,500 was added to the National Symphony Orchestra's guarantee fund at a meeting yesterday of the women's committee of the orchestra at the home of Mrs. Edwin B. Parker, 2001 Twenty-fourth street northwest.

Mrs. Tracy Dows, chairman of the committee, announced that the Twentieth Century Club and the Friday Morning Club subscribed $500 each, and that substantial contributions had also been received from the University Women's Club, the National Women's Country Club, the Women's City Club and others.

Mrs. John S. Cohen Back From Visit in New York.

Mrs. John S. Cohen, wife of Senator Cohen, of Georgia, returned to Washington late Friday from New York where she was visiting at the time her husband was appointed to fill the unexpired term of the late Senator Harris. Mrs. Cohen, with their son and daughter, Mr. John S. Cohen, jr., of New York, and Mrs. Charles D. Orme, of Atlanta, spent two days here at the time Senator Cohen took the oath of office. They are occupying an apartment at the Mayflower.

Miss Beatrice Gladstone, of New York, was the guest of Miss Janet Kohner last week.

Miss Ruth Kohner had as her guests last week-end Miss Florette Ottenheimer, of Baltimore; Miss Beatrice Levinson, of Allentown, and Miss Beverly Levinson, of Baltimore. They were here attending the A. G. reunion, which included a tea dance at the White Flint Country Club and a dance at the Mayflower last evening.

The dance at the Woodmont Country Club last evening was a baby party, with supper at midnight.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Finkelhor, who for the past month have been traveling through the West, are now in San Francisco.

Miss Christine Ekengren, daughter of Mme. Ekengren, is spending the week-end in Princeton, N. J., where she went to attend the annual house parties at the clubs at Princeton University.

Fete Champetre Schedule Is Given

No arrangements which can add to the enjoyment or comfort of the guests attending the Colonial Fete Champetre on May 20 are being overlooked by the committees of the organizations sponsoring this delightful event. The public has been invited to attend, and for the convenience of those not caring to drive their own cars, bus transportation for a nominal fee is to be provided.

The fete will take place on the grounds and in the clubhouse of the National Woman's Country Club, Bradley Boulevard, Montgomery County, Md., and is being jointly sponsored also by the Colonial Dames of America, Chapter 3. Mrs. Walter R. Tuckerman is president of both organizations. A general ticket of admission to the grounds is required and these may be obtained for both adults and children at the town office of the National Woman's Country Club, 1106 Sixteenth street, or from members of the committee. Upon entering the grounds, which are admirably suited for the holding of a fete on such an elaborate scale as is planned, amusements will be found on every side. The fete will open at 2 o'clock in the afternoon and continue until long after midnight.

Reservations for the card tables, which will be available in large numbers, may be made through Mrs. William H. Borah, chairman of this feature of the entertainment, or from members of her committee, including Mrs. George T. Marye, Mrs. J. Harry Covington and Mrs. Frank Anderson.

A dance platform is being erected on the lawn adjoining the clubhouse where a program of dances will be given in the afternoon, and where in the evening under the light of myriads of Japanese lanterns, the young folks who remain for the ball that will close the fete may dance under the open sky.

Supper arrangements are in charge of Mrs. Charles Mason Remey, through whom reservations may be made.

Original Ballets Will Be Presented

Under the simple title, "A Program of Dances," the Lisa Gardiner Dancers will this week present an alluring succession of original ballets and divertissements, as their contribution to the Spring Dance Recital season in the Capital.

In this, their own recital, the numbers chosen for presentation, tell a variety of diverting stories, done in dance pantomime, in which comedy plays a definite part particularly in the "Theme Varie," which has to do with a poet in the springtime, a sonnet to a lady, a stern duenna and a pet dog; "Fragment," which is a danced chorus; and "Saeta," a religious episode, based upon an incident that actually was observed by Miss Gardiner and Miss Christine Stewart when in Seville, last year.

Among the well-known Washington girls who will assist in the recital, are Misses Frances Rands, Kathleen Piazza, Lizzi Yoder, Fillis Speich, Katherine De Lany, Alice Canter, Betty Sahm, Peggy English, Rosa Lee Russell, Anne St. John, Charlotte Walton, Margaret Cobey, Patty Hill, Bernice Haimovicz, Jacqueline Kitchin, Anne Vucinavich, Katherine Vaughan, Margaret Becker, Jane Dunscombe, Virginia Hortenstine, Martha Bounds, Elizabeth Berkeley, Christine Stewart, Alice Louise Hunter, Mary Ettla, Betty Troth, Barbara Worrell, Leila Gurley, Esther Whited, Eda Vomachka, Evelyn Glasser, Beatrice Mullin, Betty Angerman, Vivian Dawson, Helen Roberts and Lillian Winter.

In this group are a number of solo dancers, who have created their own numbers, in addition to the classical and modern ballets which Miss Gardiner has devised, and for which she has designed the costumes, which have been "executed" in the studio under the expert fingers and supervision of Miss Christine Stewart and Miss Yoder.

Midshipmen Seniors Hosts At Luce Hall

Round of Dances, Dinners and Luncheons Scheduled for June Week.

Special to The Washington Post.

Annapolis, Md., May 7.—Members of the senior class of midshipmen were hosts at a dance given in Luce Hall tonight. Together with the rowing races between crews of the Naval Academy and Syracuse University and other athletic events of the afternoon, the dance drew a large number of guests, particularly among the younger smart set.

Within less than three weeks the gay festivities of "June Week," the term by which the commencement period at the Naval Academy traditionally is known, will be in full swing. The ceremonious occasion will be officially ushered in May 27, and the program will extend until June 2, commencement day, when more than 400 midshipmen will receive their diplomas and commissions. A dance and band concert are the only functions on the program for the opening day, but from then until graduation there we will be a continuous round of luncheons, dinners and dances.

The big event of all will be the farewell ball in honor of the graduates June 1. A garden party for the graduates by the Superintendent and Mrs. Thomas C. Hart, the ring dance by the second-class midshipmen, and a dance by the third classmen, all on the evening of May 31, will be the other outstanding formal social functions. The second-class ring dance marks the formal baptism of the class rings.

Many society folk gathered today at the Holly Beach stock farm of Sylvester W. Labrot, breeder and owner of race horses, near Annapolis, for the inaugural show of the Southern Maryland Horse Show Association. The several classes attracted many entries. The program included not only judging of equines, but a series of races also, the track on the Labrot farm, where the race horses are worked for stake events, being splendidly adapted for the purpose.

Among the passengers who sailed from Baltimore Wednesday on the steamship City of Hamburg for Europe, were Lieut. Comdr. William H. Michael, Navy Medical Corps, Mrs. Michael and their three children. They will visit France. Lieut. Comdr. Michael has just completed a tour of duty at the Naval Academy. Upon his return from abroad he will be assigned to the League Island Navy Yard, Philadelphia.

Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. Robert D. Kirkpatrick entertained at a farewell tea Monday at their residence, 10 Shipwright street, for Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. Archie E. Glann and Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. Davis De Treville, who soon will leave Annapolis.

Capt. Henry D. Cooke, commandant of midshipmen, and Mrs. Cooke had as their guests over the week-end Mr. and Mrs. V. K. Bracher, of New York, and Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Brown, of Garden City, Long Island.

ORGANIZED GROUPS TRAVEL INTO RUSSIA

Tours Indicate Growing Interest in Activities of the Soviet Government.

Indicative of the interest in Soviet activities comes the news that over 80 organized groups under the leadership of well-known American authorities are visiting the Soviet Union from May to September in cooperation with established American travel bureaus.

The tours are not organized in a helter-skelter fashion, but are closely knit to include special groups with particular interests so that the traveler may go with his own kind of people and study his own subject at first hand in the Soviet Union. The leaders are all authorities in their own fields: professors, doctors, economists, engineers and professional men and women.

The range of special interest covers industrial Soviet development, the drama and ballet, medicine, social welfare and mountain climbing, as well as general interests.

The tours range from 36 to 65 days; and the price of $300 and up, from cheap tours to de luxe tours, covers the inclusive price from New York to New York with all necessary traveling prices included. The groups will visit parts of Europe as well as the Soviet Union, so that the participants may round out a trip of widespread culture and interest.

Auto Tariff Rate On Boat Line Cut

Lower Charges Announced to Norfolk, New York and Nova Scotia.

To encourage seaway and road tours throughout the Eastern States, Eastern steamship lines have announced reduced rates for the carrying of passenger automobiles. Travelers will thus be enabled to enjoy the pleasure of ocean voyages and carry their cars on the same ship on which they travel.

Direct service is offered from New York to Yarmouth, gateway to Nova Scotia, on the new liner Acadia at the low rate of $22.50 one way for cars up to 2,680 pounds. The charge includes marine and fire insurance. Service is also offered between New York and Portland, and New York and Norfolk. The company owns in addition to the Acadia, the North Land, the George Washington and Robert E. Lee.

At least one passenger must accompany a car on all trips made at the reduced fare.

Side Trips

DOWN OLD FATHER THAMES.

Every morning this summer, three steamers will leave the Tower of London piers to take visitors from all nations on the famous river journey down the Thames, an excursion which has been a favorite for 200 years.

The trip passes Deptford, where Henry VIII built his warships and where Peter the Great worked as a shipwright, to Greenwich, whose observatory sets meridian time for the clocks of the world, to Woolwich, with its arsenal, past Dagenham, where Henry Ford is building his vast automobile factory, to Gravesend, where the pilots board the ships and so on to Southend, Margate and Ramsgate—London's great coast resorts.

MUSIC IN PARIS PARKS.

In the parks or public gardens of Paris the tourist will find music as well as flowers, plants and shady walks. The chief are the Tuileries, the Luxembourg, Parc Monceau, Parc des Buttes--Chaumont, Parc de la Muette, Jardin du Palais-Royal, Jardin des Plantes, the Villa de Paris Hothouses and the Jardin d'Acclimatation. The concerts of the great military bands are in the Luxembourg, the Tuileries and the renowned band of the Garde Republicaine is worth going far to hear.

It is best to watch the newspapers for announcements of concerts, but most of the park concerts occur every day between 4 and 5 except on Mondays and Wednesdays; on Saturday it is from 7 till 10.

TO THE TOURIST TO DOMREMY.

If you can go to Domremy, where Joan of Arc was born eight years before Columbus discovered America, and can resist the many efforts which the guides and tourist companies will make to have you visit the basilica on the site of the Bois Chenu, where, 'tis said, she heard her "voices;" if you can go there on a sunny afternoon and purposely omit to visit the museum in the cottage, with its souvenirs and showcases, and just wander about the village, which has not changed much since she lived her first 17 years within it, if you can wander where she played as a child on the banks of the Meuse, and escape the crowd of visitors, you will then most enjoy Domremy.

QUIET, QUAINT MORLAIX.

On the line from Paris to Brest in Brittany, your train at Morlaix passes over a beautiful, lofty viaduct, nearly 200 feet high, and you will wish you could see it from below. And you should at the first opportunity. When you do, you will fall in love with Morlaix for all manner of reasons. Its rulers go back to the legendary Kings of Lyonesse and the days of Tristan.

Its rambling confusion of market, shipping and beggars dominated by the great viaduct, are no less charming than the old, old houses and the white-capped Bretons who look out of their doorways. Its fifteenth century church is worth a visit, but it is a quiet Morlaix which charms, as it did Mary, Queen of Scots, long ago when she lodged in a convent here.

THE STREETS OF BERLIN.

Berlin has a unique way of naming its streets, which tends to make their finding relatively easy for tourists and taxi drivers. In the northwest section of the city the streets' names are reminiscent of Africa, the north of England and Switzerland, such as Congo, Edinburgh and Davos.

The north of the city seems sacred to the Tyrol and Scandinavia, as illustrated by Brenner and Zillertal. Trees and great savants are in the west, such as Galvani, Roentgen, and next door are the Protetsant leaders, Zwingli, Melancthon and Calvin. In the east we find the names of great artists, Rembrandt, Rajhoel, Durer, Beethoven, Wagner, to mention just a few.

Switzerland Holds Rare Charm for Scenic Lovers

Mountainous Heart of Europe Abounds in Natural Beauty Which Enchants Tourists; Trips to Historic Villages Delight Travelers From America.

By DARRELL PRESTON AUB.

Imagine a visit to Switzerland, the beautiful, mountainous heart of Europe. Even were one to have a lifetime of leisure, one could not exhaust the interest of Switzerland—its famous sports, its snow-clad peaks, historic points, its charming, busy people, highly cultured in the large cities, quaint in national costume in the villages, moving about at their affairs, taking the beauty of their surroundings quite for granted. That is something that tourists to Switzerland could never do—mundane affairs have no reality in this land of enchantment.

Because of its central position in Europe, and its extreme neutrality in peace and war, Switzerland has long been a haven for politicians and exiles of all nations, as well as religious refugees. A census of the former kings who have resided there in recent years would be interesting. Of course, the League of Nations could settle nowhere else than at Geneva.

We visit Lucerne, the beautiful city that pulsates with cosmopolitan life, because it is the center for tourist traffic. And well it might be, because there is much to see and do here and many wonderful lake and mountain trips to take. Our sightseeing includes the famous Lion of Lucerne, carved into the bare rock by Ahorn to commemorate the bravery of the Swiss Guard in defending the French royal family in 1792. This figure of the king of beasts is very impressive, being 28 feet long and 18 feet high. We also visit the Glacier Garden, an interesting geologic marvel left by nature itself, and the Swiss chalet, a perfect little palace, furnished in the medieval manner, weaving its spell of the long ago.

White-Headed Giants Visible.

From every point in Lucerne one views the white-headed giants that surround it—the Rigi, Mount Pilatus and the other peaks. Particular landmarks of Lucerne are the time-honored towers of the city wall, the Musegg, which date from the year 1385, and which are still carefully preserved. Our trip around the city also includes the famous Kapellbrucke, which was built in 1333, on which are painted 154 scenes from Swiss history and from the lives of the patron saints of Lucerne, St. Leodegar and St. Maurice.

Interlaken is next. After a day of indescribable Alpine marvels, on which we traverse the famous Furka Pass by motorcoach, we reach Interlaken, the gay tourist center of the Bernese Oberland. It lies in a smiling, blossoming valley, between the beautiful lakes of Thun and Brienz, at the portals of some of the grandest mountain scenery in Europe, for in the background towers in all her overwhelming radiance the queen of the Bernese Alps, the Jungfrau!

By a winding mountain railway that seems to be all windows, we make an excursion via Lauterbrunnen to Kleine Scheidegg, returning in the afternoon via Grindelwald. This trip will be remembered all our lives * * * the narrow Lauterbrunnen valley with its fifty waterfalls * * * "wreaths of dangling water." Regretful we return to earth from our journey amid the clouds.

Onward Through the Alps.

We travel onward through the Alps, that vast horde of petrified giants who stand forever in their snow-white shrouds, while in the verdant valleys at their feet and on their backs nestle the charming villages, towns, famous cities and resorts. Switzerland is synonymous with a beauty and peace unimaginable to those who have not seen it, for here every mountain vale is a hidden paradise, endearing in its simple, natural charm and uplifting in the incomparable grandeur of its beauty.

The lakes of Switzerland are the crystal mirrors of this loveliness. Here we are concerned with Lake Leman, which gleams between vine-covered hillsides from Montreux to Geneva. We will stop in Montreux for a while. Byron has described Montreux as "beautiful as a dream." Upon its shores stands the dark and gloomy Castle of Chillon, which inspired this great English poet to write his famous poem, "The Prisoner of Chillon."

The castle, an old stronghold dating from the ninth century, was the seat of the dukes of the House of Savoy. In the dreary dungeon beneath the level of the lake these warring rulers buried their prisoners, literally buried alive—chained for years to the ancient pillars. Byron cut his initials on the pillar to which the great Bonnivard, who aided the Genevese in their struggles for freedom, is supposed to have been chained.

There is much more of interest in this lovely tourist center of French-speaking Switzerland, but the prison-castle has been stressed because of its great interest to the traveler. We leave Montreux reluctantly and follow our tour onward.

Geneva is the most interesting city in Switzerland. For the last few centuries Geneva has been the Mecca of leaders in science and literature. Voltaire, Mme. de Stael, Ruskin, a parade of illustrious poets, novelists, essayists and philosophers—whose intimate connections with this fair and intelectual city and its environs are forever interwoven in its history. This city sheltered also Calvin and other fathers of the Reformation.

The physical setting of Geneva enchances its charm, for it is located at the southern end of Lake Leman, or Lake Geneva, as this glorious expanse of water is generally known. The Alps tower on the horizon wreathed in purple mists—the sun gilds the azure waters on which white-sailed barques glide gracefully—and the visitor wonders how the citizens of Geneva can tear their eyes away from this loveliness long enough to attend to business.

Slowly, fellow travelers, we are covering the continent of Europe. Today's imaginary journey through the land of clouds was merely to give you a foretaste of what to expect when you visit Europe in reality.

KINDLER ANNOUNCES SYMPHONY SERIES

Enough of Guarantee Fund Is Subscribed to Make Season Possible.

A concert series for the 1932-33 season was difinitely announced yesterday by the executive committee of the National Symphony Orchestra. The series will be under the baton of Conductor Hans Kindler, and will comprise eight week-day concerts, eight Sunday concerts and eight children's concerts—24 in all—with approximately a dozen world-famous artists as soloists. The weekday and Sunday concerts will be held in Constitution Hall and the children's series probably at Central High School auditorium.

Although the $75,000 fund is not completely subscribed, about $60,000 is already available, and the executive committee believes the sum needed to put the orchestra fund actually "over the top" will be obtained from advance ticket sales and donations from various organizations, many of which have already indicated that an orchestra subscription was being raised.

Coincident with the announcement of the concert series, C. C. Cappel, manager of the orchestra, announces that the National Symphony's own box office will open May 16 on the first floor of Garfinckel's, without cost to the orchestra management.

Conductor Kindler has been in New York arranging the soloists, and has announced that among the artists who will appear with Washington's own symphony will be Mischa Elman, world-famous violinist. Mr. Kindler will leave next week for Europe, to return in July. He will be guest conductor and soloist with the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra during its summer season.

Immaculata Students Give British Comedy Effectively

In the presence of a distinguished audience, including men and women prominent in the social and political life of Washington, girls of the fourth year high school class of Immaculata Seminary presented Hubert Henry Davies' comedy, "A Single Man," in the seminary auditorium on Wednesday night and won high praise.

Described as a "new and original" comedy of modern life, the play is a four-act British success that ran for a year at the Playhouse in London. The presentation at Immaculata was directed by Miss Pauline Eaton Oak.

First honors for finish of performance belong to Miss Anne Begg, who, in the leading role, gave a superb portrayal of "Robin Worthington," the "single man."

Miss Eileen Collins, as "Miss Haseltine," and Miss Margaret Bergling, as "Louise Parker," shared honors with Miss Begg. Excellent performances were also given by Miss Mary Lenihan, as "Henry Worthington;" Miss Rosalie Camalier, as "Dickie Cottrell;" Miss Eleanor Stokes, as "Lady Cottrell;" Miss Grace Joyce, as "Maggie Cottrell;" Miss Betty Shields, as "Isabella Worthington;" Miss Margaret Rover, as "Bertha Sims;" Miss Serafina Ferzacca, as "Mrs. Higson;" and Miss Margaret O'Byrne, as "Gladys."

The audience included many pastors and heads of religious and educational institutions, who were generous in applauding the young actors. The Sisters of Providence, who teach Immaculata Seminary, were present.

Players from the National and the Belasco Theaters were guests late in the evening and lauded the dramatic abilities of the students. Proceeds of the play will be devoted to the beautifying of the sisters and students' chapel in Immaculata.

George Washington University.

The Bicentennial issue of the George Washington University Cherry Tree, student annual, is being distributed. It carries the inspiration of George Washington throughout the text, and incorporates within its covers the simplicity and grace that marked the format of books of the colonial period.

Methods of the eighteenth century have been followed out in such details as type faces, choice of paper, page layouts and color. Art work for the annual has been executed by students in the division of fine arts, under the supervision of Prof. Norris I. Crandall and Albert Nelson Davis, of the faculty.

Pauline Schaub is editor of the Cherry Tree, and Wendell Bain, business manager. The editorial board includes also Ralph McCoy, Jean Fugitt, Elizabeth Rees, Marie Seigrist and William Hanback.

Georgetown University.

Georgetown University's Mask and Bauble Club will present "Capt. Applejack," a former Broadway comedy, as its annual spring play Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock in Trinity Parish Hall.

The cast assembled for "Capt. Applejack" includes several capable performers who took part in the three one-act plays presented by the club last December at the Wardman Park Theater. R. Vernon Murphy, '33, will take the title role; Raymond Hogan, '34, will appear as Borolsky; Frederick Waters, '34, as Mike Vaeleska, and Rolland Gallagher, '34, as Jimmy Faire.

The Mask and Bauble Club players are under the direction of Prof. Gerard Yates, S. J., who coached the successful cast that won the intercollegiate dramatic contest at Philadelphia last year. Dennis Connell, a local director, is assisting.

The competition for the Hamilton Medal for the best extempore debate will be held tonight at the college between six members of the Philodemic Society, Georgetown's oldest debating club. The medal is awarded annually by Dean George E. Hamilton, of the Law School.

Announcement was made at the Law School last week of the annual scholastic prize winners of the Butler and White Law Clubs, presented at the recent banquet of two groups. John E. Farrell won the Fegan prize, offered to the Butler Club by Assistant Dean Hugh J. Fegan. The prizes offered by Prof. Charles L. B. Lowndes to the White Club were won by Joseph John Supanski, Edmond J. Olsen and John H. Law.

John S. Quigley, '35, of Connecticut, was announced as the winner of the Brenan Medal in apologetics as a result of a contest held at the college. Other scholastic competitions scheduled for the near future are for the Mallory Historical Medal, the Dixon Elocution Medal and the Pendergast Essay Medal.

Catholic University of America.

A residence for women graduate students at the Catholic University will be opened in the fall and placed under the direction of the Sisters of Notre Dame de Namur, it was announced last week by Dr. Roy J. Deferrari, dean of the Graduate School. Lay women will be accommodated at Graduate Hall, Trinity College, in the vicinity of the university and the entire hall will be at their disposal. This will be the first time in the history of the university that lay women have been able to maintain a residence on the campus during the academic year.

This summer the lay women will be housed in St. Thomas Hall, likewise a departure from the custom of past years when they have been forced to reside in the city. Both these moves on the part of the university have been brought about, according to Dean Deferrari, by the increasing demands which are being made on the university by Catholic women who wish to carry on graduate work at a Catholic institution.

Southeastern University.

Final examinations in the school of law of Southeastern University will begin tomorrow for a period of two weeks, it was announced yesterday.

Examinations in the school of accountancy will start May 16. All examinations will be completed by May 21.

The university is making plans for closing academic and social events of the year. The faculties are planning a farewell celebration for the students on Saturday night, May 21, when lessons are ended for another year. There will be special entertainment and dancing. The committee on arrangements includes Thomas J. Frailey, school of law and school of accountancy faculties, chairman; Louis M. Denit, school of law; Ralph S. Scott, law and accountancy schools; Maurice A. Martin, accountancy; August H. Moran, law, and Peter Valaer, preparatory schools.

The alumni association is planning its annual dinner to the seniors for June 2, at which time grades will be made public and honor students announced.

Howard University.

Mother's Day will be celebrated this afternoon at Howard University in the new dormitories for women, when mothers of students will be guests at tea of the sophomore class. The speaker will be Mrs. Mary W. McNeill, of the Board of Education. Music will be furnished by the women's glee club. Mothers will be greeted by Dean Lucy D. Slowe.

The university health service will give a dental exhibition from 9 to 6 o'clock daily for the week beginning tomorrow in the women's corrective gymnasium.

American University.

Mother's Day will be observed at the College of Liberal Arts of American University today with a special dinner for the mothers of all students in the college dining room, and services afterward in Hurst Hall chapel. The speaker for the afternoon will be Mrs. Edgar Compton, of Belleville, N. J., mother of a freshman student, Alice Compton. There will be music by the mixed quartet and by Harlan Randall soloist. Robert Parker is chairman in charge of the program. There will be a tribute by Ward Mitchell a student, and response by a mother, Mrs. E. E. Henderson, of Clarendon, Va.

Arrangements have now been made for two showings of Macbeth, the annual Shakespearean show by the Dramatic Club, the first will be Thursday, May 19, for high school students, and the second will be Friday May 20, for the general public, both performances to be in the gymnasium auditorium on the campus, under direction of Will Hutchins, professor of art.

The college annual, "Aucola" is out, one of the most artistic yet produced by a junior class at the college, presenting several novelties including photographs of campus buildings taken at night, photographs of the five girls chosen as the most beautiful of their classes and an art theme taken from Old England.

The Men's Glee Club has elected officers as follows: Edward Tate, president; Carlton Skeggs, vice president; Lawrence Rice, business manager; Lee Esper, secretary-treasurer. The club sang last Friday night at Constitution Hall.

Alpha Chi Sorority has elected officers as follows: Lois Spencer, president; Cornelia Kirby, vice president; Henrietta Goodner, secretary; Betty Brundage, treasurer; Emily Tate, sergeant at arms; Martha Skidmore, social chairman. WEARING OF FASHIONS OF MOTHER'S GIRLHOOD IS SMART FOR HER DAUGHTER

Many Modes Characterize Spring Styles

Black Cotton Suits Are Chic; "Chalky" Crepe Seen as Popular for Fall.

By DARE.

NEW YORK, May 7.—Many are the little things that a mere fashun cricket can mention that are new in the mode of this spring season! So many, indeed, that one might lose interest if too many facts and details were just dished out like so many peas. So, spring lamb and green peas or no, let me tell you a few of this spring's mode mannerisms, starting with color.

Color is certainly in style! What do you think of a Cyclamen pink and a Cambridge blue, for instance, in a spring jacket costume? Then there is a darling costume which combines a gray, red and eggshell twill skirt with a crepe blouse-cape which is in a waffle crepe in a little checked pattern in beige and black!

Well, and that isn't all—the way pink and all shades of white, blue and pale green, maize and mauve are used with black is interesting. Because the somewhat austere elegance of black has such definite value to miladi at almost all hours of the day—and now Dame Fashion says she can use one of the pale and so flattering colors with it, usually near her face—and preserve all the elegance of black while taking advantage of the flattering quality of the lighter shades. A salmon pink velvet coat, for instance, worn with a black dull luster dinner dress. Or a maize-colored capelet edged in sable, worn with a black chiffon. And the corsage or belt or some other discreet, oh, very discreet, touch on the frock, is of the lighter color.

Linen and Alpaca Suits.

Speaking of black—or were we? The linen and alpaca suits in black that put out tentative fingers in style direction last summer are promising to be whole-heartedley sponsored this summer. Reports from our big department stores all over the country show that they are being bought by style-wise and practical ladies everywhere. Oh, I almost forgot to mention shantung! Yes, black suits in these cottons are chic. And anyone who survived a hot summer in any city last year will instantly see the value of them! A humid day, the leather of taxi seats, the straw of the subway seats, everything in the city so conspires to ruin our light colored summer frocks before we even arrive at our rendezvous! Now black linen, shantung and alpaca suits to the rescue—with the chick of black, the refreshing note of colored blouses, and the light weight of cotton fabrics!

Everything that can be said about lace has been said! So I can only add that lace continues to be popular, and will continue to be, if the lace frocks that are being bought today aren't going to be relegated to closets. And no wonder, when lace has achieved such lines, such chic, and such practicability. A lace tailored suit, for instance—can't you just see how many uses it would have? An amusing story is told in New York of several young ladies of the same set who, deciding on a last-minute whim to go on a Southern cruise, each included a couple of lace dinner dresses in her wardrobe. The first "dress" night they all appeared—wearing lace gowns almost identical in effect, with variations in the way of belts or boutonnieres. Rising to the occasion, they dubbed themselves "the lace curtain sisters!" and, needless to say, thereby added greatly to their own and everyone else's good spirits.

Weaving Toward Fall.

Far be it from your own Dah-ray to show off! But it does amuse me a bit to predict, you know—so on this bright spring day, let me tell you a little weaving story. Now that spring and summer fabrics are safely launched, the big material makers are busy with fall things. And they have some wonders to disclose—chiefly that "chalky crepe" which you will hear much more about anon. This is a really remarkable product of modern and scientifci weaving! It is unique in construction—the pebble and drape appear to be the same when viewed from any direction, or sewn on the width, length, true or untrue bias. Now, at last, the designer has a material which gives drape, texture and surface appearance, three indispensables to true art in clothing the human figure. Watch these "chalky" crepes—watch too, that they don't appear under some other and far more high falutin' name—just to make me furious!

Light touches! No, not a couple o' dollars to help out a friend! It takes more than an optimist to make that kind of a touch these days. I mean the organdy lingerie pieces on dresses, and the taffeta gilets, scarves, blouses—whatnots, on woolen dresses and tailleurs. The keynote of the spring mode seems to be gay, I should say—not only in colors, but in delightful little notes here and there that just can't leave either wearer or looker in the dumps!

Not the most important, nor the most interesting—but of sufficient import to be written about today, are the above. A few at a time will lead to chic, my deah, so read and learn and incorporate these little facts into your spring and summer wardrobe.

Bags Match Suits

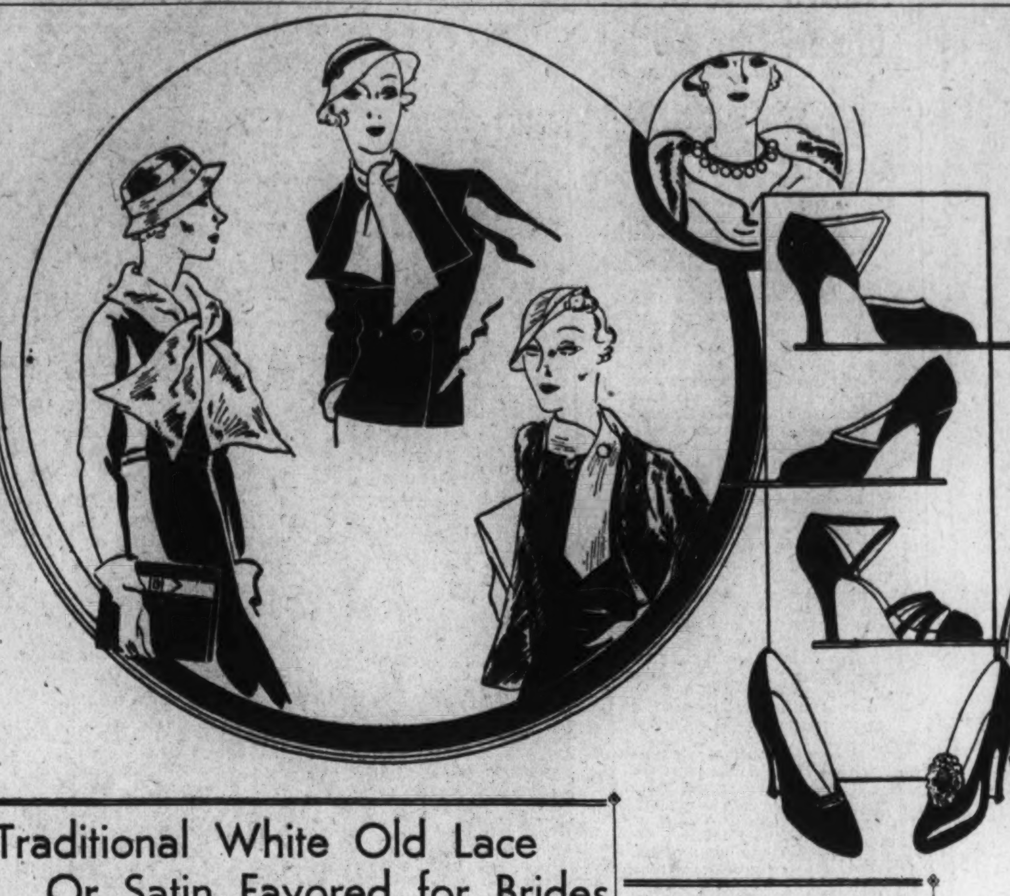
New York, May 7 (A.P.).—Last winter we had bags of nubbly woolen, diagonal woolens and tweeds to match our coats. This spring many of the bags match the sheer woolen weaves of our dresses and the novelty mixtures of our suits and topcoats.

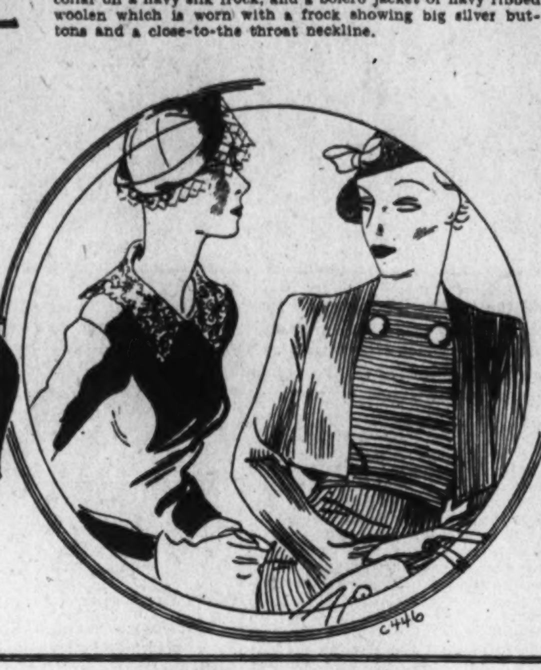
For Bridesmaids

New York, May 7 (A.P.).—Dusty pink and powder blue are two of the most popular shades for bridesmaids' gowns. Made of the new mesh lace, net or organdie, they are charming and provide a lovely contrast of color.

Clocked Hosiery

New York, May 7 (A.P.).—Keeping time with fashion these days means wearing clocked hosiery. Some very sheer imported hosiery features neatly embroidered clocks. Lace clocks are quite smart, too.





Smart accessories include the tailored handbag at the left, which is of stitched patent leather in navy with a light strap, and the group of shoes down the center. At the top is a black and white open-shank sandal; below it a black and beige opera pump with sandal-cut sides; then a navy kid sandal with very open toe treatment; to the left, a slot-buckle pump, and next to it a patent pump with ornate steel buckle in classic interpretation.

The neckline has become very important in fashion, providing a point of interest for many accessory treatments. In this group of sketches, for instance, there is first the ball necklace close to the throat, of white balls on a black composition band; then the three scarf treatments which are sketched in the circle at the left and which include the white galyak cravat, the beige wool ascot worn with a brown tweed short jacket, and the buttoned-on white corduroy scarf on a black corduroy frock.

In the circle below there is the ecru lace, very youthful collar on a navy silk frock, and a bolero jacket of navy ribbed woolen which is worn with a frock showing big silver buttons and a close-to-the throat neckline.

Traditional White Old Lace Or Satin Favored for Brides

New York, May 7 (A.P.).—With the arrival of May many a young woman's fancy is turning to thoughts of wedding gowns with traditional white the favored color and bridal satin, or old lace, the favored fabric.

Last year's dusty pink, ice blue and beige costumes are not countenanced by this year's brides.

Even the bridesmaids will wear white, the color in the wedding procession being emphasized in the costumes of the maid of honor and the flower girls.

Bridal gowns are classical—simplicity and dignity being stressed in the lines. They are long-sleeved and all have trains, some four or five yards in length.

The simply draped veil has taken precedence this season over turbans and tiaras and hats, and often the veil is thrown over the head with neither orange blossoms nor pearls to hold it in place.

Seashore Fashion Now Conservative

New York, May 7 (A.P.).—Seashore fashions are going conservative. The new swimming suits are oddly reminiscent of the ones that aunty wore.

They are two-piece affairs, reaching to just above the knees, though they could hardly be called "revealing." The undergarment hangs from the shoulders like a slip, though the bottom part is fashioned like shorts, skimpy ones.

The outer garment is a dress. Usually it is made of silk crepe, or moire, in dark colors. Those made of black crepe de chine and trimmed with narrow bands of white look exactly like the old-timers.

Brown for Evening Gown Is Appearing

New York, May 7 (A.P.).—Brown, which promises to be a leading color for fall, is already appearing for evening wear.

One gown, reminiscent of prewar styles, is fashioned of cinnamon brown maline. The bodice is high and the skirt long and straight to the bottom, where rows of maline ruffles provide an illusion of fullness. Lettuce green flowers decorate the back of the bodice.

A dinner dress of dark brown rough crepe has a straight little jacket collared with white ermine. Another of the same hue has sleeves of embroidered white batiste.

Princess Lines Being Featured At Paris Show

Scant Skirts of Dresses Are Closely Fitted at Hip; Boleros in Style.

Paris, May 7 (A.P.).—Princess lines are featured at Schiaparelli's summer showing, all coats and many dresses being closely molded to the figure.

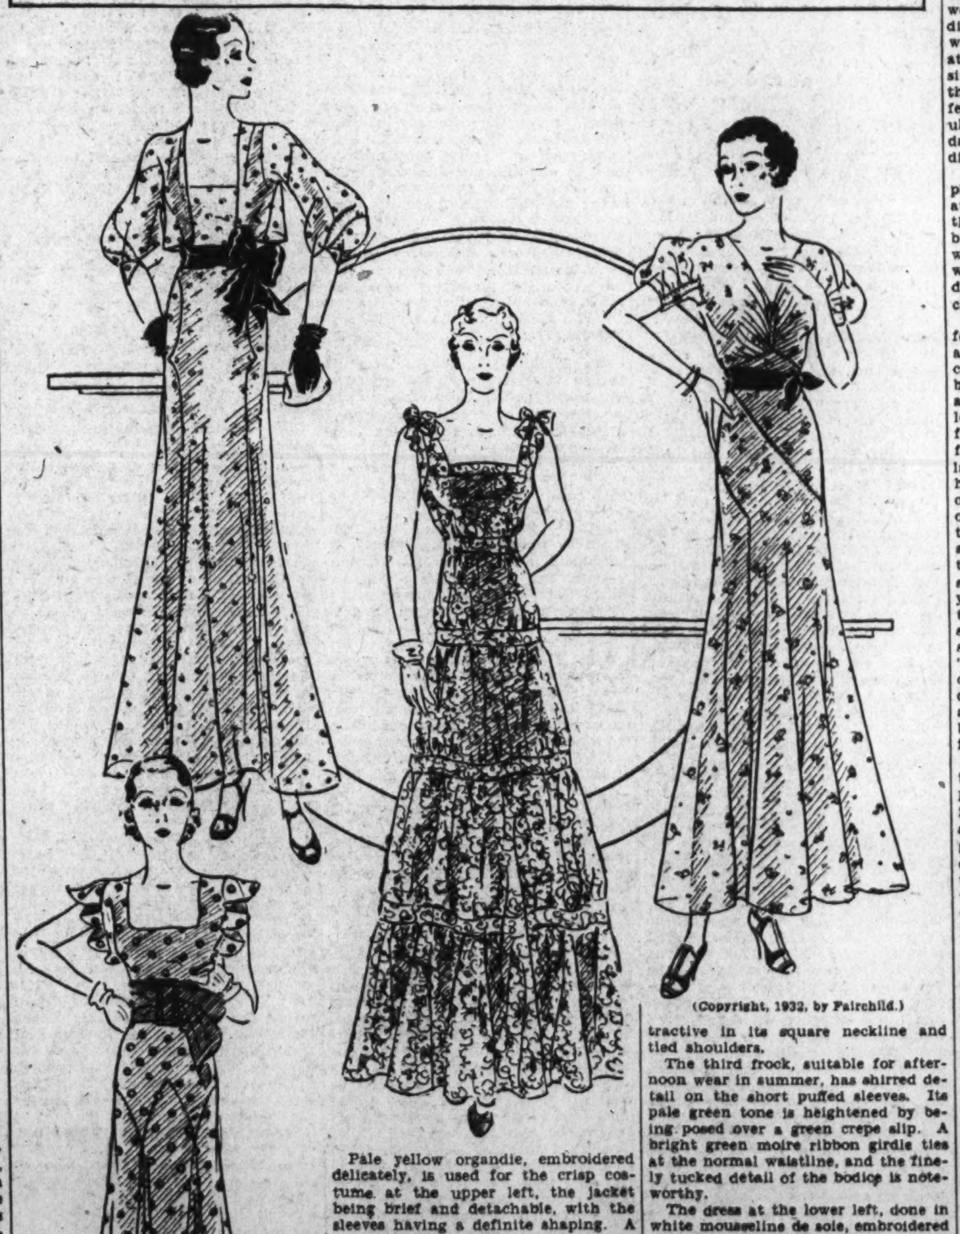
Schiaparelli has designed one brown coat trimmed with red foxes. Dresses have scant skirts, all models being fitted tightly at waist and hips. Day skirts tend to be shorter, about 12 inches from the ground, while evening dresses reach the instep.

Princess dresses in wool and silk are made in beltless styles, with many dart tucks. A sapphire velvet evening coat is trimmed with sapphire coq feathers.

The use of fitted, high top skirts is continued, often in combination with matching bolero jackets and contrasting bodices. Many very short boleros are shown.

Both sleeveless dresses and dresses with plain long sleeves are popular. Schiaparelli uses many yokes, and also wide shoulder treatments. A short basque jacket is combined with a black wool skirt.

Gowns Like Those Mother Used to Make



(Copyright, 1932, by Fairchild.)

Pale yellow organdie, embroidered delicately, is used for the crisp costume at the upper left, the jacket being brief and detachable, with the sleeves having a definite shaping. A shiny contrast is offered in the brown cire ribbon girdle.

An interesting printed organdie, in violet tones, is used in the development of the center dress, the skirt effective in its horizontal sections joined by bands, and the bodice attractive in its square neckline and tied shoulders.

The third frock, suitable for afternoon wear in summer, has shirred detail on the short puffed sleeves. Its pale green tone is heightened by being posed over a green crepe slip. A bright green moire ribbon girdle ties at the normal waistline, and the finely tucked detail of the bodice is noteworthy.

The dress at the lower left, done in white mousseline de soie, embroidered in red rings, introduces a novel idea in a wide red linen belt that has a tailored air. The wide shoulder line is gained in flaring, flounce-like sleeves. An even greater crispness is gained in the white taffeta foundation.

Tea-Gown Negligee

New York, May 7 (A.P.).—Negligees are something to ponder over this season since they can step from the boudoir into the parlor with the utmost propriety. Most of the new ones look like tea gowns and they are trimmed with ruffled short sleeves, or tricky long sleeves, sashes, shoulder corsages and capes. One even flaunts a bolero jacket.

Match Stick Collar

New York, May 7 (A.P.).—Here's a new costume gadget borrowed from the kitchen. It's the match stick collar, to be worn with tailored clothes. Beads designed like match sticks are used for multistrand necklaces in all different colors. Bracelets that you twist around your wrist a number of times match the necklace.

Capes or Sleeves Needed Even for Evening Dresses

Little Wings and Ruffles Appear on Formal Gowns as Fashion Frowns on Uncovered Shoulder; Military Note Features Daytime Ensembles.

By VYLLA POE WILSON.

Fashion has given a cold shoulder to the uncovered shoulder mode and insists this year that capes and scarfs and uncovered shoulder effects be part of every costume. Even the evening dresses have taken on little wings and cape sleeves and ruffles.

There is chance of the infinite variety which makes an essential element of feminine charm in the shoulder fashions of the moment never possible to achieve with sleeveless dresses. Even too thin or too large upper arms take on new grace when the softening effect of a lace cap sleeve or little ruffles are added to an otherwise plain dress.

The spring bride and her younger sister, the sweet girl graduate, are giving anxious thought just now to the importance of wedding gowns or graduation gowns. In fact, except for the trains and veils on the wedding dresses there is very little difference between those designed for wedding gowns and those for graduation or other such functions. This situation may be traced to the fact that simple formality and much feminine lure is the keynote of the ultramodish costume of the hour, for day-time or evening wear or for weddings or parties.

The princess line is the most approved of just now by the fashion authorities, and for formal occasions the long dress is imperative. The bride or her sister, the girl graduate, who chooses to wear the conventional white or off white costumes for wedding or commencement will be apt to choose lace this spring.

This or her next best choice chiffon or flat crepe will be manipulated and draped into long graceful princess lines which fit not too tightly but "quite snugly." The necklines are "boat" shaped or square or shallowed pointed cowl or draped as the fancy dictates. All sleeves are long for this type of dress. The unwritten law of long, tight sleeves for weddings has been broken this season by many of our best designers in favor of leg-o'-mutton sleeves, bishop sleeves or the sleeves that are full to the elbow and caught into long tight cuffs to the wrists. If the bride wants a train, and most brides do, no matter how young they are, the smartest note is to have it cut in one with the long skirt or at least to swirl and trail in such a manner that it appears to "cling" until it gets to the floor. One of the high points of fashion in wedding gown trains is the extreme width at the end, enhanced some times by borders of lace if the dress is of chiffon or satin or crepe.

One bride who is to be married in the exquisite gardens of her father's home this spring, has chosen a most intriguing wedding dress which is supposed to be a deep secret until the garden nuptials in June. It is of white chiffon with a plaited ruffle about the edge of the below-the-ankle skirt to match the ruffle which falls from the round neckline giving the fashionable covered shoulder effect and forming short above-the-elbow sleeves. But this bride wants long sleeves even for a garden party frock wedding and so lace mitts which belonged to her grandmother and come nearly to the shoulder will be worn. This pretty girl will wear a white straw hat on her curly golden hair, with the hat tilted well to the front and up in the back and filled in with orange blossoms.

Mrs. Hoover is wearing a spring ensemble composed of a dark blue chiffon dress made on smart lines with a dark blue grained silk coat with a scarf collar. With this she wears a blue straw hat with a shallow crown and medium brim.

The First Ladies of many of the States figured importantly in the social functions of the last few weeks as the wives of many of the governors accompanied them to the governors' convention in Richmond and came with them to Washington.

Mrs. Gifford Pinchot, wife of the Governor of Pennsylvania, who is regarded as a Washingtonian, wore at a dinner party a lovely dress of gold metal cloth and tulle made on princess lines. With this she wore a wrap of two shades of gold brocaded with a handsome sable collar on it. At an afternoon party Mrs. Pinchot wore a dress of bronze tulle, with a wide bronze straw hat.

Another governor's wife, well known in Washington where she once resided as wife of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Mrs. Franklin Roosevelt had on a handsome gown of white crepe de chine brocaded in satin, and with tulle scarf sleeves. With this Mrs. Roosevelt wore a white fur coat.

Mrs. Suzanne Boatwright, formerly Miss Pollard, daughter and hostess for Gov. Pollard of Virginia, wore at one of the dinners in Washington a dress of white satin and black extremely chic as well as girlish. With this she wore a white ermine evening coat. For one of the luncheons Mrs. Boatwright had on a dress of blue flowered silk made in coat effect. With this she wore a small blue straw hat.

Mme. Bachke, wife of the Minister of Norway, has a chic daytime dress of dark blue flat crepe made with a cowl neckline and long tight sleeves with narrow turned back cuffs to match the facing of the cowl neckline. With this she wears a blue coat and a small blue hat.

Mrs. Michael MacWhite, wife of the Minister of the Irish Free State, chose for one of the recent luncheons a dress of black velvet made with flounces on the skirt and surplice bodice filled in with cream lace. With this she wears a matching coat with an ermine collar and a small black hat.

Mrs. Charles Parker Stone has a sport dress of beige silk and wool knitted material with which she wears a beige sport coat with a beige straw hat and fox fur.

Mrs. J. Pierpont Moffat is wearing a coat suit of tan silk, with a chiffon

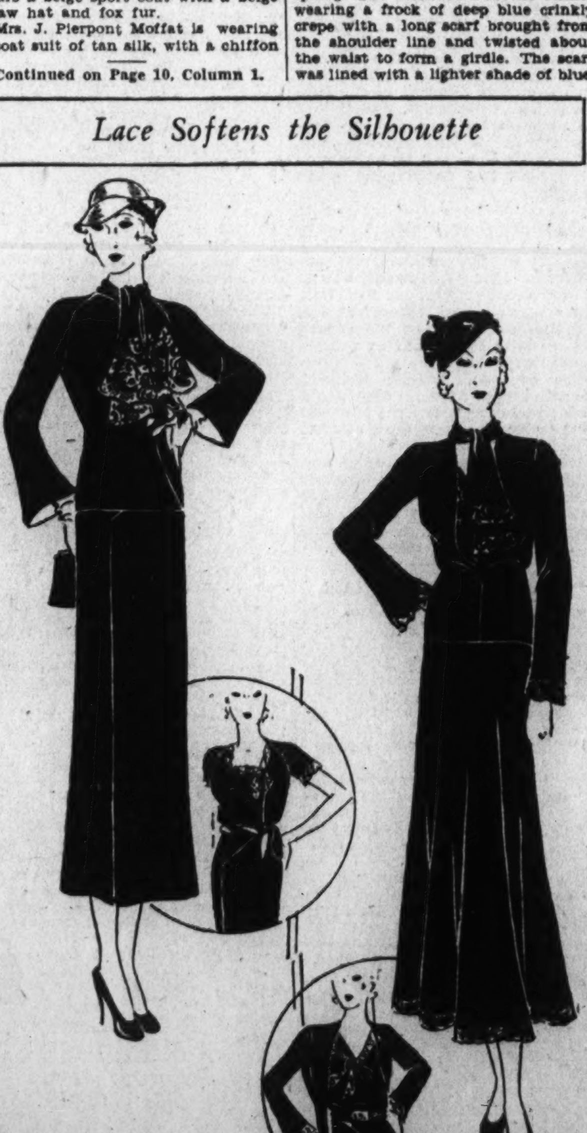
Lace Softens the Silhouette



(Copyright, 1932, by Fairchild.)

The first lace-trimmed jacket costume is developed in a navy heavy sheer crepe, with Alencon, dyed to match, introduced as a shallow yoke at the neckline of the bodice of the one-piece frock, also as a finish for the brief sleeves. Lace again appears in the scarf-collar.

The second costume is fashioned of black canton crepe. Lace, agreeing in color, is introduced as a hemline border and in effective manner as a sheer decoration for the bodice of the frock. It is repeated as a trimming for the scarf ends of the jacket.

"Addressed Envelope" Handbag for Milady

New York, May 7 (A.P.).—An original handbag seen recently in London was designed to resemble an envelope that had been through the post. The bag was made of white doeskin and the owner's name was written in gold in the fac simile of her husband's handwriting.

An enamel design in one corner resembled the stamp, with "postmark" written across it. On the back was a monogram seal of onyx and diamonds.

Style Trends Proving Varied And Complete

New A. B. C.'s Include Bows and Birds on Everything and Artificial Eyelash.

Chicago, May 7 (A.P.).—Here are the A. B. C.'s in fashions:

Artificial eyelashes; awning stripes in linens and cottons for sports.

Bows on everything; button trimmings; bags of wooden beads from Chanel.

Capes from shoulder affairs for daytime wear to long full evening ones.

Diagonal weaves and stripes.

Evening suits which have tailored silk jacket over informal dinner frock.

Flowers on everything; folded over neckline at base of neck.

Gloves of mesh and crochet.

High, or seemingly high, waist line.

Initials on handbags.

Jackets for morning, noon and night.

Knitted sportswear, smarter than ever, in many new weaves.

Lingerie touches—Collars, cuffs or bows—for dark frocks.

Mauve gaining favor as new color for evening; mesh hosiery.

Necklines are "V" or "crowl" or square.

Openwork—Cutout patterns in shoes, dropstitch weaves in fabrics.

Pique evening frocks, polka dots, polo coats, small daytime prints.

Quilted bags coming in for summer.

Ringlets—Flat, sculptured effect—about the ears in the new bob.

Semidemi dress, very new "in-between" frock; has covered shoulders and higher neckline. Sandals and sandal effects. Scarfs.

Tailored styles that are young and jaunty, tucking, three-color combinations.

Undies that are designed to give that svelte look demanded by the modern silhouette.

Vestees of dainty wash materials for the spring suit, veils.

Wool evening frocks, the material of which is very sheer, white as leading color for summer.

Xylindine red—in fact, all vivid reds, are high fashion.

Yokes on many of the new skirts give a flat trim hipline.

Zippers close handbags, sweaters and foundation garments.

Blue Evening Frock

Paris, May 7 (A.P.).—Comtesse de Robilant is among smart Parisians who are choosing dark blue instead of black for evening frocks this spring. She attended a recent dinner wearing a frock of deep blue crinkly crepe with a long scarf brought from the shoulder line and twisted about the waist to form a girdle. The scarf was lined with a lighter shade of blue.

Costly Cotton Frock Leader In New Style

Leghorn Hats, Nose Veils and Capes Return to Favor; Extremes Avoided.

By ELEANOR GUNN.

NEW YORK, May 7.—Mother is having her day all over again. Many of the fashions she wore when a young girl have been revived and adapted so that mother may still wear them—although they are young fashions, too.

It is many a year since cottons have been taken so seriously, or perhaps one should say, so fashionably. During the war they were revived as an economy measure, but now one feels inclined toward even such cottons as are more costly than silks.

Lined up with other revived fashions are buttons for purposes of decoration as well as utility, leghorn hats and sailors in rough straws, filmy nose veils, capes and ever so many other things, including side-pleated ruches. Yet there is nothing quaint about current modes. They are sane and sensible, whether simple or elegant, and usually make a point of avoiding extremes.

Hostess Pajama Now Passee.

This is no time for exaggerations. The hostess pajama went by the board, and sensational backless evening dresses are also being discarded in favor of more wearable types.

Skirts are regulated so that, though they are long, they are not difficult to wear; and waistlines, though far from settling down, have at least become reconciled to their ups and downs, and are plastic enough to do your bidding. Up for evening, and somewhere in the midsection the rest of the time, is the verdict.

Suit With Separate Waist.

The suit worn with separate waist, another of mother's youthful and perhaps best beloved fashion, again leads the parade. The blouse may be Irish crochet for auld lang syne or for chic, or it may be batiste, or organdie, or crepe satin, or any one of a dozen materials, not forgetting seersucker and gingham.

Even sleeves conform to the ideas of the maligned '90s. They are wider and shorter. The bracelet sleeve, adjustable usually and worn to make room for the bracelets that all really smart women feel called upon to wear, appears in coats as well as dresses. Capelets are also common to both.

An insistence on ladylike rather than spectacular clothes is noticed everywhere, and also, it must be admitted, a leaning toward mannish fabrics and costume details.

Fall Shoe Shades Include Rust Color

New York, May 7 (A.P.).—Dark brown, deep red and a new rust color will provide the "perfect understanding" to the new wine shades of the fall costumes. They are the 1932 autumn shoe tones.

In the shoes and leather industry, the dark brown of a tete de negre type is called cinder brown. It will be used for all-occasion shoes.

The red is of the vintage family, and therefore, titled "Porto." Sunrest is the name of the rust shade. It will be used principally for town and country shoes.

These three shades, together with six staples already announced—Indies brown, swagger brown, admiralty blue, paddock green, leafbrown and Madeira brown—will all appear in the 1932 fall season shoe and leather card to be issued shortly by the Textile Color Card Association.

Crepe Leaf Belts

Paris, May 7 (A.P.).—Leaf belts consisting of a chain of leaves made of colored crinkly crepe are worn as the sole ornament on some of the new white evening frocks. They are often accompanied by a waistlength evening wrap to match. Green leaf belts with green crepe wraps are seen most often, although coral crepe leaf belts and jackets are also popular.

Tan Men's Shoes

New York, May 7 (A.P.).—Men's shoe colors for the season include a custom tan for brogue types, a brighter tan for collegiate types, a bourbon brown for general wear and a cordovan shade for limited use.

The colors were decided on at a joint meeting of the Tanners, Shoe Manufacturers and Shoe Retailers.

Gauntlet Cuffs

New York, May 7 (A.P.).—Pique collars and cuffs, which give such a crisp freshness to so many spring coats, often wisely are detachable. One rather dashing model has gauntlet cuffs, almost reaching to the elbows, and a jaunty little cape finished with a bow at the throat.

Stitched Silk Hats

New York, May 7 (A.P.).—Hats of stitched silk in all the lovely new colors are bound to be as popular as straws this summer. The stitching gives them the body necessary to actual smartness and they are light and cool. Kid is used to trim many of them.

Black Wool Lace

New York, May 7 (A.P.).—Black wool lace is something new for afternoon. One smart woman attended a fashionable tea recently wearing a frock of wide meshed black wool lace designed along straight simple lines and finished with a white peau d'ange collar with a large bow on one side. With it she wore a simple black milan hat with two white gardenias poised on the left side.

Novel Silk Ginghams

Paris, May 7 (A.P.).—Silk ginghams are a novelty just now. In checks and plaids like the cotton variety, they are used for summer frocks and suits blouses. Blue and white and red and white are the most popular color schemes.

Women's Units Center Eyes On Elections

Virginian Writes Poem on Ideal Clubwoman as Question Arises.

By VYLLA POE WILSON.

Sub rosa discussions of candidates for national offices in women's organizations are most attention-arresting in this period of spring and summer conventions. The paramount problem before the nominating committees and the voting delegates concerns what qualifications make an ideal woman officer.

So important is this question in the minds of the women that some of the clubs, led by the General Federation of Women's Clubs, are devoting part of their program to the discussion of the ideal clubwoman. The women contend that if they are to be called upon to place women of their organizations as the banner bearers they must be first sure that they have the qualities of leadership which are engendered by their conduct as mere members or officers of the organizations they seek to head.

Recently the General Federation of Women's Clubs circulated among its membership ideas of the model clubwoman written by Belle M. Blair, of Weston, Va., as follows:

"She is always at each meeting,
No matter what the weather
Is always pleased with all that's done,
Without one why or whether.
She accepts the offices tendered her—
In a manner that's divine,
And if she'd rather not accept
She never makes a sign.
To serve on all committees
Is her joy and her delight,
And her part on these committees
She is never known to slight.
The subject that's assigned her
Is just the one she wants.
No matter what the subject is
It never her spirit daunts.
She's smiling and serene always
And always does her part.
To make each meeting a success—
She works with hand and heart.
To find this model woman,
We should search the whole world around,
And 'grapple her with hoops of steel'
As soon as she is found."

One of the interesting spring conventions was that held by the National Society Colonial Dames of America this week coincident with the three-day open house at the new headquarters and museum in Dumbarton House, the national headquarters of the Colonial Dames. So many really rare and valuable antiques of the Federal period have been collected in the museum that it is now officially listed among the museums of the country.

The garden party held in the lovely gardens of Dumbarton House on Thursday afternoon was a great success. The reconstructed gardens inclosed by a paneled wall of brick and plaster form a fitting setting for the lovely old Dumbarton House. Those in charge of this garden have been careful to exclude every kind of tree or shrub not authentically of the Federal period. Many of the trees and plants and shrubs have been collected by Colonial Dames from some other historic gardens. This old-fashioned garden contains such plantings as the tulip tree, mountain ash, or service fringe trees, honeysuckle, laburnum, rose acacia and many evergreens.

Miss Wilma Laville gave an interesting talk on fashions and presented a fashion revue of summer clothes.

An art exhibit was held by the Takoma Park Woman's Club Friday afternoon, April 29, in Trinity Parish Hall. Rare old quilts covered the entire walls, making of the place a veritable art gallery. Hand woven coverlids, priceless samplers, lovely old pieces of silver and other artistic pieces, many of them of historic interest, were displayed. Such historic families as the Honeywells, of Boston, and the Haswells, of Vermont, were represented. Dr. Walter Hough and Dr. Frederick Lewton, curators of the Smithsonian Institution, judged the exhibit and ribbons were awarded as prizes.

The outstanding unit in the exhibition was arranged and owned by Mrs. Sarah Donnar. This unit included a coin dating back to 300 B. C., a Wedgwood cheese box, coming to the owner from the Wedgwood family, a shoe buckle (1630) made of wrought iron and silver plated, and a lovely old silver epergne. One piece of jewelry of particular interest was that of a hand beaten gold link from a girdle (1720). This exhibit was awarded the blue ribbon.

The next exhibit, made up entirely of textiles and the property of Mrs. James A. Robertson was awarded second place. This collection contained Japanese kimonas, bearing the insignia of a noble family, mandarin coats and an exquisite embroidery on cloth made of pineapple fiber.

The third place was awarded Mrs. Willing P. Hopper, whose collection contained a silver coffee urn of unusual beauty, coming to the family 125 years ago, and many other pieces of old silverware. A medallion painted on ivory was particularly interesting.

Honorable mention was given the display arranged by Mrs. Louis Vogt. This contained a hand-tufted bedspread made in 1775, the property of her daughter, Mrs. J. LeRoy Shehan, a Parian marble jewel case, a rare old French child's toy tea set and a beautifully done sampler dated 1822.

Loyal Legion Hears Lecture Upon Gardens

Need for American Type of Landscapes Stressed by Speaker.

How to make an American garden was the subject of a lecture by Mr. William M. Bagnall, given under the auspices of the District of Columbia Society, Dames of the Loyal Legion, at the Willard Hotel on April 30.

In endeavoring to create an American type of garden, Mr. Bagnall said, we must stop imitating and begin creating. We have wasted millions of dollars endeavoring to get European effects and have failed because Americans have used European material that was not adapted to American soil and climate. Americans can have the luxuriance and the finish of English gardens if native long-lived vines and shrubs are used. The United States really has a greater wealth of plant material than does England.

The Italian garden is a reflection of the Italian character; the charm of English landscape is a reflection of the English character.

American gardens must be the reflection of the American character.

Mr. Bagnall further said that landscape gardening is better for America than formal gardening because landscape gardens give us the opportunity to forget ourselves. They are more restful and refreshing and are a pleasant contrast to the artificiality of urban life.

Mr. Bagnall particularly stressed the thought that many otherwise beautiful gardens were spoiled by the too frequent use of rock decorations, also by the many methods of building rock gardens. It was shown how to properly place and build a rock garden. The best patterns are taken from nature.

The lecturer then brought out the importance of the nurserymen becoming conscious of the new spirit that is animating the garden thought of America, the spirit of adventure and curiosity, the eagerness to make gardens the best, the most beautifully designed and richly furnished in the world.

Colors, Mr. Bagnall said, can be used to give the illusion of long or short distance and the proper blending of colors is important. He also said Americans must put more personality in gardens and find out how to give them mellowness and beauty without having to wait a lifetime.

Girls' Friendly

Mrs. George E. Pariseau, diocesan president, presided at the annual business meeting held at Epiphany Parish House on May 2. Announcement was made that Mrs. John C. Boyd, diocesan treasurer, would present a banner to the diocese. This banner is being made in England and will be ready when the diocesan representatives are due at the Los Angeles conference in 1933.

Colonial costumes will be worn at the colonial tea for G. F. S. members to be given at the Holiday House, near Mount Vernon, May 21, from 4 to 7 p. m., under the auspices of the Senior Club. This party is particularly timely and interesting, inasmuch as this historic site was originally the property of George Washington.

On June 4 and 5 the older members' conference will be held at the Holiday House. On June 7 a card party will be given and Mrs. E. B. Meigs will be in charge of table arrangements.

Miss Elizabeth Keyser was in charge of the candidates' service and party at St. Paul's (Rock Creek) Church, Saturday afternoon, April 30. The procession of 325 little girls dressed in white with white veils and blue bands was most impressive as they marched from the parish house to the quaint old church.

The annual festival service, held at the Epiphany Chapel, Sunday afternoon, May 1, was well attended and Dr. Z. B. Phillips, rector of Epiphany Church, spoke most eloquently on "Helpfulness." During this service a number of associates were admitted, some of them having been members since candidates. Mrs. Frances Yarnell, the wife of the vicar of Epiphany Chapel, was also admitted as an associate.

Monday night, at the Epiphany Branch, Misses Mary Howell, Mary Stuart and Jessie Carlton, delegates to the younger members' conference at the Holiday House on April 23 and 24, reported on "The Needs of Younger Members," such as enthusiasm, cooperation, social activities and group systems. Dr. Z. B. Phillips then gave an instructive talk on "Enthusiasm." Mrs. Magee, chairman of the diocesan membership committee, asked for leaders to help the smaller branches and requested all older members to join an associates' class, to be held in September. On May 9, Mr. Frederick Snyder will have his final discussion of current events at Epiphany Branch and all members and friends are invited.

On April 26, St. John's Branch, Georgetown, had their usual meeting. Misses Ruth Harting and Olga Angelo, delegates to the younger members' conference, gave their reports, and a rehearsal was held for two plays to be given in May. The annual corporate communion of the diocese will be held at 7:30 a. m., May 8.

Soroptimist Club

The Soroptimist Club met at the Lafayette Hotel on Wednesday at 1 o'clock and President Nell Hysong presided at the luncheon meeting. There were about 70 guests and members present. Sallie Dillard's group won the attendance prize and individual prizes were given the group members by Mrs. Hysong.

The guest of honor was the well known Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley, chairman of the Woman's Party, who spoke on "Equal Rights for Women, at Home and Abroad." She and her party had just presented a petition to President Hoover on the same subject. Mrs. Wiley stressed the necessity of cooperation among the women and cited the struggle of the women to retain their nationality after marriage with one of foreign birth.

Formal dedication of the Soroptimist Walk will take place on Tuesday afternoon at 4:15 o'clock, and Mrs. Hoover has been asked to be present. The planting of the Soroptimist Walks is a national movement with the clubs, and they are dedicated as the flowers begin to bloom on the trees chosen. It is expected to have the Marine Band and a broadcast of the event has been arranged. The Hon. Sol Bloom, of the United States Bicentennial Commission, will speak, as will many others of prominence.

Final arrangements for the international convention at Sacramento are under way and a special Soroptimist car will carry the delegates and friends from Washington to California. Laura Waters is chairman of arrangements for the trip.

Audubon Society

The fifth outing of the Audubon Society of the District of Columbia will take place Saturday, May 14. The country covered will be Mount Vernon and vicinity in Virginia. The object of the outing will be the observation of wild bird life in the migration season.

Those who wish to take part must assemble at 1013 D street, at 7:45 a. m., and there take a special Audubon bus. The fare to Mount Vernon is 30 cents, and the request is made that each excursionist have the exact fare. The return trip will be made on the regular Mount Vernon bus, which leaves every hour. The return fare will be 60 cents.

There will be competent leaders to conduct the party and children will be admitted if accompanied by adults who will be responsible for their behavior. Each person must provide his own luncheon, pay his own carfare and bring field glasses.

On the outing from New Alexandria to Arcturus, Va., one week ago, there were 48 persons. It was a fine day and the excursionists were enthusiastic, for they saw many rare birds and 80 species in all. One of the outstanding treats of the day was the view of four hooded warblers chasing each other about and singing all the time. Another event which marked the day was the sight of the prothonotary warbler, also singing. The bird lovers felt they were particularly fortunate in seeing the whip-poor-will and later a flock of bobolinks. The chat seemed to have recently arrived and was very quiet. The white-eyed vireo and the oven-bird sang all the morning, but they were very elusive and hard to see. Fortunate were those who were on this outing, for they saw the first hummingbird of the season. They did not see a great many warblers, but considered themselves lucky to have seen 80 species of birds altogether.

Art and Artists in Capital

By ADA RAINEY

Special Bicentennial Exhibit on Display at Arts Club.

Fine Display Shown at Sears-Roebuck. Galleries.

THE Arts Club is having a special Bicentennial celebration which will continue through the summer. The members of the club and all Washington artists have been invited to send in paintings, sculpture, etchings and drawings having to do with the life and times and the personality of Washington. There was an enthusiastic response and the club galleries are filled with a collection of scenes of Mount Vernon and the environs of the city and the nearby Virginia landscape. Over 100 paintings, sculpture and etchings have been hung.

Most of the paintings are frankly illustrative and must be judged as such. There has been a tendency to stress the realistic presentation of the subjects, except in a few instances which rather stand out from the group. Perhaps this illustrative and realistic way of painting is difficult to get away from when the subject is so frankly historical. Roland Lyon in his delightfully free expression of "Pohick Church," has struck the high note of light and brilliancy. Garnet Jex in "Christ Church, Alexandria," has done one of the best paintings of his career. He has seen in another manner which is stimulating and more expressive than mere illustration. Mr. Jex has done special work along the subjects of Washington and his environment and it will be remembered that in the National Gallery is a large canvas in the exhibition gathered by the Department of Parks and Planning.

Carl Rakeman has treated his canvases, of which there are three, in an imaginative manner, throwing over them the glamour of light and romance. "The Spirit of Washington," by A. H. O. Rolle, is treated also imaginatively, but in quite a different manner. The city of today is shown with its tall skyscrapers and smoke and steam bursting forth from the chimneys, a modern presentation, but doubtless visioned by Washington and infused with his spirit.

Charles Bittinger, who is noted for his interiors and paintings of colonial houses, has two canvases, one of Mount Vernon and the other of a colonial interior with the old-fashioned wall paper painted meticulously. It is an interesting study in pattern. "Old Bruton Parish Church," at Williamsburg, by Mary Riley, is an individualistic treatment which is most interesting.

The water colors are bright and attractive and are largely of gardens which have the quaintness of former days. "Old House in Alexandria," by Susan B. Chase, is one of the most delightful things in the room. "Wakefield, Birthplace of Washington," by Francis Hungerford Combs, is another charming house. Then there are "Rose Garden, Mount Vernon," by Leslie Jackson, and the brilliantly-painted "Mount Vernon," of Eliot O'Hara, which is an achievement; a charming "Box Garden, Mount Vernon," by Annie D. Kelly; "Old House, Georgetown," by Marguerite Lent; "Lee Mansion, Arlington," by Elizabeth Evans Graves, and the "Old West Gate, Mount Vernon," by L. M. Leisenring, all of which are particularly attractive.

The etchings, many of them by Emily Burling Waite, are most interesting and so are many of the drawings. Altogether the little show is most timely and tends to awaken interest in the times of Washington.

Every second Sunday there will be a special reception for the artists and those specially interested in the exhibition, when the hostesses will be dressed in colonial costumes. The teas will continue through this month at least. This afternoon the hostesses will be Miss Elizabeth Lagenbeck and Miss Maude Burr.

On Tuesday evening an especially interesting occasion was the talk given on the making of etchings, with a practical demonstration by Emily Burling Waite, who has been staying in Washington this winter. Miss Waite made a portrait of Mr. Charles Statton, architect and member of the Arts Club. Then she demonstrated the entire making of the etching, which was unusually interesting to the large audience that was present.

THE rare collection at the Sears-Roebuck Gallery of 200 etchings by Rembrandt, loaned by Mr. Lessing Rosenwald, gives a remarkable opportunity to Washingtonians to study these wonderful prints. All varieties of Rembrandt's prints are shown. There are many portraits, landscapes and religious scenes, notably the large etching, "Christ With the Sick Around Him," and "Christ Preaching." There are the famous "Jewish Bride" and a "Descent From the Cross.' But no description except the most detailed can do this remarkable collection of prints justice.

Margarita Hausman is one of the exhibiting artists. There is a self portrait of the artist and another of the German Ambassador which she has recently completed. But her outstanding work is the several large marines of the coast of Spain, which the artist painted when in that country and were to have been placed in the collection of the Queen of Spain if the revolution had not occurred.

Arrah Lee Gaul, a Philadelphia painter, is represented by 60 paintings of the Philadelphia Sesquicentennial. There are many houses and interiors of "High Street," where so many old houses were built but for a day. The artist has done her part to immortalize the houses which have now been destroyed. Particularly excellent is the "Seventeenth Century Slate Roof House," of which she has painted the interior. These canvases are done with a certain charm in style that is most intelligent.

Ket Zaal, Guatemalan cartoonist, has an entire room devoted to his clever water colors. The cartoons are brilliantly satirical. They will be appreciated here.

Wolcott Clarke Waggaman has a group of charming and effective water colors of old castles in Spain and France. Rather they are of scenes, fountains, bits of decorations, windows and houses met with on the travels of the artist. They are delightful in color and style.

Water colors by Lester Stevens, of Rockport, Mass., are in the same room. The latter are strong and vigorous, as distinct in style as possible from those of Mr. Waggaman. These scenes are of the north coast of Massachusetts and of Provincetown.

It has been recently decided to keep the Sears-Roebuck Gallery open

"Late Afternoon Light on the Cathedral at Zamora," by Wells M. Sawyer, Washington artist, now in Spain.

Germany with several well-known sci- during the coming summer and next year as well.

A LECTURE on "The Place of Oriental Rugs in Fine and Applied Art" will be given tomorrow evening at the Hekimian Gallery, 1214 Connecticut avenue.

Mme. M. Jueptner-Stuarts is having an exhibition of her portrait photographs at the Oakie Gallery on Connecticut avenue. She has taken photographs of many notable personages in Europe and in Canada. Mme. Jueptner has studied photography in entists, and has perfected a method for use with platinum prints that is delicate and efective.

Moses Dykaar has just completed a portrait of Gen. Pershing. The bust is excellently well modeled and is a realistic likeness of the world-famous general. It is not yet in marble, but the artist expects to have it placed in the Capitol eventually.

Tomorrow evening the Corcoran Gallery of Art will be opened in the evening in honor of the convention of the American Federation of Arts.

The Washington Color Club is having its annual spring exhibition at the Mount Pleasant Library, where it will be on view through this month.

Edith Hoyt's painting "Mount Sampson," in Jasper National Park, Canada, was used as the pictorial cover on the Literary Digest. This is a special distinction, as only those artists who have something of a national reputation are favored with a colored reproduction in this magazine.

Miss Hoyt is to have a special exhibition of her paintings at the Woman's City Club, beginning May 22.

AT the annual meeting of the Society of Miniature Painters, Sculptors and Gravers, the following officers were elected: Miss Hattie Burdette, chairman; Miss Clara Hill, chairman of exhibits; Mr. Friedrich von Dachenhauses, secretary. Mr. Alyn Williams, until recently the chairman of the society, has sailed for England, where he will attend the formal opening of the Royal Miniature Society in London.

A special exhibition of painters opened last week at the Phillips Memorial Gallery. It contains the works of Marjorie Phillips, Gifford Beale, George Bellows, David Burliuk, Walt Kuhn and Harold Weston.

Wells Sawyer, who has received much commendation for his paintings in Spain, is again traveling and painting in that country. Mr. Sawyer, it will be remembered, had an exhibition of his works in the National Gallery during the winter.

WITH DISTRICT MUSICIANS

By ELISABETH E. POE.

WASHINGTON is looking forward to its out-of-door presentation of grand opera on June 5, when "Aida" will be sung at the Griffith Stadium. St. Louis and other cities have been most successful in open air opera and it is to be hoped that this first performance here under such favorable auspices and with such well known stars will be the forerunner of similar events.

Music lovers will notice with interest the musical side of the great services at Washington Cathedral this week when the Great Choir and Sanctuary are opened for public worship and praise. For the Mother's Day service today the United States Marine Band will play and provide the accompaniment for the Cathedral choir of men and boys who will sing under the direction of Edgar Priest, organist and choirmaster of Washington Cathedral.

A treat is in store tonight when the Ukrainian National Chorus will sing at Constitution Hall on its present tour of the country in honor of the Bicentennial Anniversary of George Washington.

The Interstate Male Chorus, with Commissioner Clyde B. Aitchison conducting, brought its twelfth concert season to a close last evening with a concert at Memorial Continental Hall. Its audience was of the usual capacity type. Mr. Aitchison picked his program from among the better-known numbers of the male choral repertoire, and this the audience seemed to appreciate. Quite in the Bicentennial spirit, a vigorous rendition was given Dudley Buck's canata, "Paul Revere's Ride," written around the themes of the national anthem, with incidental solos by Leonard Davis, barytone, assisting artist, and Ross Farrar, tenor, of the chorus.

Franz Bornschein, of Baltimore, was over to hear his own modernistic compositions, "The Two Wives," which was dedicated to the chorus and its conductor, and a colorful setting of Mencken's "Ships in the Harbor." Of solid substance were Arthur Foote's "Bedouin Song" and Podbertsky's "God Bless Thee, Love, Forever." The chorus contributed Bantock's setting of the old English story of the wandering "Farmer's Boy" as a possible solution of the farm relief and unemployment problems.

Leonard Davis, the assisting artist, is a young singer of promise, with a pleasing personality and a vibrant voice, which time will mellow. He sang the familiar "Toreador Song," from "Carmen," and a group of ballads, in addition to incidental solos with the chorus. Robert L. Feuerstein accompanied the chorus and soloist.

The program for the Sunday afternoon Music Hour at the Y. W. C. A. at 5 o'clock will be given by students of the music division. Those appearing on the program will be Pauline Terrell and Louise McNerney, pianists; Alma Day, soprano, and Thelma Mathews, contralto.

Gabrielle Bernier will be presented by Felian Barzia in a piano recital at the Arts Club Wednesday.

The schedule of the United States Marine Band and Orchestra for the coming week is as follows:

Monday, band concert at 2 p. m., auditorium, Marine Barracks.

Wednesday evening the United States Marine Band Orchestra will accompany the Choral Clubs in their initial presentation of the cantata "Washington" in Constitution Hall, under the auspices of the District of Columbia George Washington Bicentennial Commission.

Friday, orchestra concert at 3 p. m., auditorium, Marine Barracks.

Friday evening the United States Marine Band Orchestra plays a concert and furnishes incidental music to the pageant by the Grand Lodge of Eastern Star in the Washington Auditorium, under the auspices of the District of Columbia George Washington Bicentennial Commission.

Saturday the leader of the United States Marine Band will act as adjudicator of the Tri-State Music Festival in Huntington, W. Va.

Due to the above Wednesday evening engagement, the regular concert will be canceled.

A novel program of ensemble music will be given under the auspices of the choir of the Calvary M. E. Church, under the direction of Louis Potter, tomorrow night at 8:15 o'clock at the church auditorium. The program will consist mainly of piano and organ duos, several of the numbers using two grand pianos.

The District of Columbia Chapter of the American Guild of Organists Monday elected the following officers to serve during the coming year:

Dean, Christopher S. Tenley; subdean, John Russell Mason; secretary, Miss Edith B. Athey; treasurer, Mrs. George E. Warfield; registrar, Mrs. John Milton Sylvester; auditors, William R. Hamill and Mrs. Z. W. Alderman; executive committee, Miss Charlotte Klein, Rollo G. G. Onyun and Robert Ruckmann.

A program organized primarily as a benefit for the National Symphony Orchestra will be presented by the Washington String Quartet in the west ballroom of the Shoreham Hotel on Friday at 9 p. m.

Adolescent Girls More Alert Than Are Boys

Salt Lake City, Utah (U.P.).—Just why it should be, Dr. Aurelia Henry Reinhardt, president of Mills College, didn't explain, but she does maintain that girls in the adolescent stage are far more mentally alert than boys.

This is why, the college president said, that there is a tendency toward unbalanced classes in coeducational colleges—the youths do not like to be shown up.

Arlington Club

At the regular monthly luncheon and business meeting of the Arlington Women's Club, which was held at Windsor Arms last Monday, May 2, a delightful musical program was provided by Mrs. Gilmore, a former member of the Chicago Opera Company, who sang several beautiful selections. Mrs. Echols also entertained those present with a number of delightful piano solos.

Speaking on the social welfare work of her organization, Mrs. Kelly, of the Arlington County Welfare Board, gave a most interesting talk.

As this past week was devoted to furthering a county-wide clean-up campaign, a report from Mrs. Haley was read to the effect that all clubs and societies were cooperating in this movement for community improvement. The club voted also to make a concerted effort to improve the appearance of the community by discouraging in every way the erection of cheap and unsightly homes.

At the suggestion of Mrs. J. V. Smith it was voted to hold another card party, in order to swell the building fund, on Monday, May 16, at Windsor Arms.

This will be her first appearance in Washington, as she has recently returned here to live after several years on tour under prominent lecture bureaus. She is also known as a radio entertainer. Her program will include interpretations of Indian folk lore and music, with her violin, a treasured Italian instrument, nearly 200 years old.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Club of Bethesda will be held on Tuesday, May 10, at 2 p. m., when election of officers will take place.

BOOKS AND THEIR AUTHORS

By ELISABETH E. POE.

THOUSANDS of women readers of The Washington Post will smile fondly when they read of the coming centennial of Louise May Alcott, author of "Little Women," a classic which has delighted literally a multitude of girls since it was written 63 years ago.

This is a book which never fails to attract the mind and heart of the little girl into whose hands it is placed by a discriminating parent. Mrs. Alcott was one of a glorious company of literary friends who made Concord, Mass., a new Parnassus. Emerson was a close friend of the family of Alcotts, and Thoreau also was a neighbor to the woman who was to reach the heart of girlhood more than any other writer of her day.

It is pleasant to turn from thoughts of Miss Alcott to a news item stating that Mrs. Alice Hargreaves, who inspired Lewis Carroll's immortal volume, "Alice in Wonderland," has arrived in New York to assist in the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of the Oxford don who gave this classic to the world. It is a far cry from the Alice of ten years who listened so eagerly to the first reading of a book that millions of other children have now read and rejoiced in to the dear old lady of 80 years, whose proudest claim is that she was the original Alice.

Dear young-old Alice will see many things in this country which will appear to her "curiouser and curiouser" but I feel sure she will apreciate the kindly interest with which Americans will welcome her as the living embodiment of an inspiration to a great book.

After all, to inspire genius is as much in itself as to be one.

England is suffering with the rest of the world in the depression and one effect has been on publishers. Yet, on the whole, so Hugh Walpole reports, books have sold. This is not true of all books, of course, but there have been a number of very large sales and most of the publishers have a victory or two in this regard to report.

One result of the new conditions in the British book world is a return to the chapbook, so to speak, and six-pence volumes are in the market even of such writers as Galsworthy, Wells and Margaret Kennedy.

It is amusing to learn that in the zeal for making fac similes of letters and manuscripts of collection value that some of the fac similes are taken frequently for the originals and have even found their way into collections. Of course, as long as the particular collector is willing to acknowledge these duplicates as fac similes, there is no great harm done. The difficulty will come in future years, when these copies achieve the dignity of originals, innocently perhaps at first, but just as surely frauds.

The tribute once paid by Anatole France to Princess Martha Bibesco, when he said, "She possesses all the treasures of the spirit," is justified in the latest book from the inspired pen of the princess, "Crusade for the Anemone" (MacMillan & Co., New York).

In this book the princess has revived the French tradition of the essay in the form of a letter, a difficult art, especially when it must contain, as well, the song of a true poet.

With infinite tenderness, the author tells the story of the Anemone, "that lily of the field" which Christ took as his inner theme in his great Sermon on the Mount. Never were nobler words spoken than these: "Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow. They toil not, neither do they spin and yet I say unto you that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these."

From Palestine Princess Bibesco wrote back five letters to chosen confidants of her thoughts and emotions. One letter went to a canon of Notre Dame, celebrated for his wit and learning; another to Lord Thomson, of Cardington, commander of the British brigade that occupied Jerusalem in 1918, later a victim in the burning of the Dirigible R-101; a third to the dying King of Roumania; one to a Gentile, and last and perhaps the most beautiful of all the letters, of stern but glowing beauty, was to "the Dead." Out of these epistles came the present book.

For each of them and for every reader of discrimination the Princess found winged words and high thoughts in Palestine. She was a new kind of pilgrim to the Holy Land, one who brought with her as much spiritual and mental treasure as she was to take away from it. As additional equipment for such a task as hers the Princess took with her the abiding faith of a Christian and reverence for the holy places of her religion.

Her style is one of classic purity and she knows the right use of words—to portray the soul that others might see its wonders.

The book is dedicated to Lord Thomson of Cardington in these stirring phrases:

To the Memory of Christopher Birdwood
Lord Thomson of Cardington.
He delivered Jerusalem.
Flying to India
He suffered the Phoenix's death
On the aerial pyre of Allonne Hill
Near Beauvais, in France.

The Princess reminds us that in Greek the word anemone means "flower of the wind." In the first Epistle to her Uncle Abbe she discloses many experiences of the spirit while in the Holy Land, and her sensations in the sacred places of the New Testament story. The confusion of religious controls there takes away some of the sanctity of these memorable landmarks. Yet she had resources within her, and armed with them she saw the real Jerusalem; and her journey to Bethlehem also was fruitful of things of the spirit.

There is many a bugle call in the Epistle to a Knight. The author sees the true innerness of the British occupation; and there are several memorable pages in which she gives a poetic interpretation of the ringing trumpet sounds of the Nicene Creed.

In her Epistle to a King the woman's heart lays bare her pity for King Ferdinand of Roumania. As she writes: "a king is to be a priest who sacrifices himself. She speaks of Ferdinand's suffering when he had "to heap condemnation on the head of a beloved son, in whom you too had placed all delight."

So with a whimsical touch she makes a herbal out of the flowers of the Holy Land with which to heal the wounds of a king. It is pleasant to know that King Ferdinand actually got this letter. It must have cheered those dark hours before his painful death.

The Epistle to a Gentile is filled with wit and wisdom. No doubt he enjoyed even if he did not gain faith from it. He should have, but alas, there are no Pauls nowadays to preach to unbelievers, and they appear with their own plight, for the most part.

The Epistle to the Dead is a masterpiece. Its epitome is in the first two sentences:

It can not be that I still am, and that you are no more.

I think of you, therefore you are again.

As the princess concludes the book and this epistle, speaking to her beloved dead:

"My beloved ones, it is in my human nature that I shall see you again. For God became man to understand all that belongs to man, at Nazareth in Galilee."

The fortunate ones who obtain a copy of this book will never part with it, except to those they love better than themselves.

JOE BAILEY, THE LAST DEMOCRAT. By Sam Hanna Acheson. (The MacMillan Co., New York.)

Joe Bailey, who was a Democrat from Texas, would have a hard time finding his way about in the Chicago Democratic convention of 1932. Many of the Texas Democrats of today ignore the slouch hat and the spread-eagle manner of Joe Bailey and his kind. Only Heflin was left in the Senate to portray the Bailey tradition; and, alas, he was snuffed out by the voters of Alabama.

Bailey was a picturesque national figure for a score of years. He believed in the mailed fist and often forgot to put velvet gloves over it. He fought with almost every one who came to hand, Republican and Democrat alike. In his battles he was singularly nonpartisan in picking his opponents. He claimed, of course, to be a "yellow dog" Democrat, and he was a rough-and-tumble debater who enlivened many a dull hour in the Senate chamber.

Mr. Acheson got the material for his book from original sources. It is a craftsman-like job, and the many friends of Senator Bailey in Washington who remember his unique personality will rejoice at this opportunity to refresh their memories as to his career.

NEW POEMS, EIGHTY SONGS AT EIGHTY. By Edwin Markham. (Doubleday, Doran & Co., New York.)

A poet who has lived 80 years and is still writing poetry to the tune of 80 new songs is indeed a literary marvel. Glancing over the new book one can not find another "Man With the Hoe," but that is not to be expected. Such a gold mine can only come once in a life time, even that of a poet.

It is surprising to learn that Mr. Markham has adopted a new verse form, that of the sonnet, in his later years. Of course, he had used this form now and then in former years. His success in the present volume is outstanding. Take for instance this sextet out of a sonnet called "The Long Quest."

Now, after hungerings, you bring me bread;
After long death, the rising from the dead;
After the crashing seas, the harbor bar,
After the heated sands, the cooling well;
After the stones, the fields of asphodel;
After the storm-tossed night, the morning star.

Write on, Edwin Markham! Age can not wither the cunning of your poetic hand or rob the infinite variety of your genius.

SIR PHILIP SIDNEY. By Mona Wilson. (The Oxford University Press, New York.)

The perfect flower of the Shakespearean-Elizabethan age, Sir Philip Sidney often has been called. It is true that for several centuries he was the beau ideal of chivalry to the youth of England. A courtier, yet he did not crook the fawning knee to royalty, although he was close in amity to the Virgin Queen who knew how to pick men.

Besides, Sir Philip Sidney was a poet of real worth. He came to the fore at a time when poets were not greatly regarded in their native England. Sir Philip made the writing of verse popular, and has set a high standard for other poets to follow after.

Miss Wilson has given us a fair glimpse of this Elizabethan worthy and gallant. We can understand after we have read her book why the great of London followed after his coffin through streets hushed into quiet by the grief of the populace. He fell on the field of honor at the battle of Warnfeld, and the nation mourned at his passing.

Read These and Cheer Up

Two Books of the American Scene Show This a Pretty Good World

By JOHN ERSKINE

THE PONY EXPRESS, by Arthur Chapman—G. P. Putnam & Sons.

DANIEL CHESTER FRENCH, by Adeline Adams—Houghton, Mifflin Co.

HERE are two excellent antidotes to the depression. I happened to read these books together at a moment when the world news, the reports of business at home, and the fantastic tax evolution in Washington were enough to kill optimism. I finished these books convinced that after all this is a pretty good world, and the country I was born in is not so bad.

There might seem to be little in common between the Pony Express, which carried the mail to California through peril of flood and storm and Indian ambush, and the work of a great sculptor, but the Pony Express was a symbol of us in our most poetic moments, and this particular sculptor was the spokesman for our common life at its best.

Regarded simply as a business venture, the Pony Express was insane and unprofitable, but it satisfied the impulse for pioneering, for communication, for a united country, open and safe from village to village.

A cynic might say that locomotion and communication have been overdone, that if it were not for good roads and high-powered cars, gangsters and kidnapers would not have developed their present career.

Right to Be Proud.

But every addition to power brings also a moral problem and a temptation. The linking of our two coasts, whether by wagon train, pony express, telegraph or railroad, is one of the things of which we have the right to be proud.

It expressed ourselves. It was no accidental episode, but a culmination and a prophecy in our conflict with distance and time. We had to get the mail through to the Western Coast. We tried mules, and camels, and oxen. It had to be horses—our horse, the mustang.

* * * *

AS for the sculptor, Daniel Chester French is a standing answer to the facile legend that American life, above all, New England life, was unfavorable to art and artists.

He was as American in his own sphere of culture as the frontier saddle-makers who devised the trappings for the Pony Mail Riders.

He found his vocation as naturally as any boy of Italy or Greece.

New England born, he grew up in Concord with Emerson and the Alcotts for the family neighbors, with the Revolutionary memories of the town vivid before his eyes and the transcendental philosophizing of the local sages habitual in his ears. In that society art was at home, however we may have forgotten.

Judge French bought a quantity of clay for his children to model. Self-expression, intelligently disciplined yet spontaneous, was expected in that household and in that community, and while Daniel Chester French was still a youth, before he had studied abroad, he had done the fine head of Emerson, perhaps the best portrait of him, and he had made the stirring Minute Man at the famous bridge.

* * * *

We have been tempted to make frontier life seem more dramatic by suppressing its solid qualities. The Pony Express Rider, as we saw him long ago in Buffalo Bill's show, dashed up to the lonely station, shifted the mail from his winded steed to the back of the fresh horse waiting for him, and dashed off with only a second's pause in his hard race.

Our attention was not called to the station where he had paused nor to the series of stations carefully planned and maintained which made this riding possible, nor to the elaborate trucking system which got ammunition and supplies to the central depots.

This titanic labor of an unspectacular kind laid the real foundation for the later express companies, for the railroads, the telegraph and all other forms of communication.

Seen clearly in Mr. Chapman's book they remind us how solid was the fabric of our frontier world, how wisely imagined and how thoroughly organized. The spectacular rider, the desperate shot, seemed the memorable figure in the picture, but his destiny was controlled by other men, in their way stronger than he.

Many elements met in the development of the Western trails. The short route toward the north was the one which the ponies eventually took, but the southern route, a thousand miles longer, remained important because of the threatened rupture between the slave States and the free.

The South feared that government subsidies for the northern routes might some day leave their part of the country handicapped in their communications with California. The conflict of political interests, therefore, prevented the Government from doing what it should have done to develop either overland route.

In this respect the history of the Pony Express offers no contrast to the performances of our legislature today. It was private capital and very personal energy which put through these early mail routes.

* * * * *

IF it is a temptation to remember only the spectacular in the frontier record, and to suppress the patient labors of quiet men, it is equally tempting to describe the Puritans in terms of their narrowness or their fanaticism.

Logical, but Not True.

The New Englander was, if you choose, a Puritan, he was often narrow, and often fanatical, and perhaps it would be logical to conclude that his esthentic impulses were inhibited; it is logical but it is not true.

The early Puritans had architecture and much rich skill in handicrafts, and the later Puritans gave us for a number of decades the best literature we then had, and some of the best painting and sculpture.

On many grounds I do not myself care much for the Puritans, but I am tired of hearing them maligned.

I write these words just after listening to a famous Russian opera—a modern work on a Slavic legend. The plot involves a conflict between the old and the new in Russian religion.

As I followed the frightfully gloomy drama I reflected, not for the first time, on that morbid tendency in the Russian temperament which far more than Puritanism identifies goodness with unhappiness, and induces unnecessary worry about one's soul.

But I wouldn't say that the Russian temperament, with all its Puritanism is inartistic, nor would I say that the Puritan temperament in New England was blind to beauty. Not when I remember the work of Daniel Chester French.

CAPES ARE ESSENTIAL FOR EVENING GOWNS

Mrs. Marshall Orme Exnicios has a dress of black flat crepe with a deep draped collar of black satin faced in white and tied at one side with a white satin bow. With this she wears a black coat with a high collar.

Miss Evelyn Walker had on at a party a dress of white chiffon and lace with the lace forming the flounces and tiny short cape sleeves.

Miss Mary White, daughter of the Governor of Ohio, looked very pretty at an evening function in a dress of old blue and silver brocade, made on princess lines. Her wrap was of the brocade of the gown with a huge white fur collar on it.

Mrs. John G. Winant, wife of the Governor of New Hampshire, appeared in a modish evening gown of black satin heavily embroidered at the hem and made on princess lines. With this she wore a black velvet coat. For an afternoon event Mrs. Winant wore a dress of black chiffon with a black coat and high collar. Her hat was a small black straw one.

Mrs. Joseph B. Ely, wife of the Governor of Massachusetts, chose for a dinner party a dress of silver lace and black velvet, modishly designed. With this she wore a black velvet coat with a white fur collar.

Mrs. Doyle E. Carlton, wife of the Governor of Florida, was seen in a smart gown of white satin with a draped neckline and made on princess lines. With this she wore a white brocade coat with a white fur collar.

The spring and summer girl of 1932 will march to daytime events in martial array, taken from the military periods of the history of the world. She will wear a tunic made of white flat crepe, bound with silver or gold, which Marc Antony might have been proud of. These tunics are worn with flared skirts and with white straw hats in the shape of real Roman helmets, but, of course, with flatter crowns to conform to the mode of the present era.

For traveling and dark street dresses the "Little Corporal's" best coats have doubtless been copied for the Napoleonic air of some of the dresses, with their wide lapels, double breasted fastening and general military air capped by the real Napoleonic hats of matching straw to be worn with them suggest such.

Some of the street dresses with the military note are finished with rows of shining gold and silver buttons or embellished with the "gold lace" which denotes rank on the uniforms of our Navy officers.

This military note is very apparent in the ever popular suit frock, some of the jackets to these ensembles being cut exactly like the mess jackets of the midshipmen at Annapolis or the cadets at West Point. The Zouave coat adopted from the military organizations of this name by the ladies of Civil War days are also included in fashionable wardrobes of the day.

Skirts continue to be high at the waist line but seem to have arrived at a permanent length at the hem line for different hours of the day. The almost-to-the-ankle skirt and the almost-to-the-knee skirt for daytime are both frowned upon by the well informed on fashion matters.

Sky "Glow" Like Auroral Display

Light on Moonless Night Is Weakest in Zenith, Says Professor.

Denver (A.P.).—The dim, faintly luminous light in the sky of moonless nights has been found to be in part akin to the light of the auroral display.

Dr. V. M. Slipher, director of the Lowell Observatory at Flagstaff, Ariz., told about it at the annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, Southwestern Division.

Dr. Slipher said he had determined that the green or spectrum line, long regarded as typical of auroral displays, is at all times present in the spectrum of all parts of the night sky.

Special apparatus was designed by Dr. Slipher in his study of the light and by its use he was able to establish that the spectrum line is weakest in zenith and brightest toward the horizon—more intense in the west in the evening and in the east in the morning, viz.: Most intense in the sky toward the sun.

Mississippi Scout Wins Totem Pole Contest

Columbus, Miss. (U.P.).—Blanchard Kennedy, 17, has never taken a lesson in art or sculpturing, and yet he won a Nation contest among American Boy Scouts for carving the best totem pole.

His victory over thousands of the best sculptors and artists of the Boy Scouts will give him a free trip to Alaska this summer as a reward. There he will view some of the original totem poles in their natural state.

Blanchard's prize-winning totem pole is of cedar, 30 inches high and 4 inches in diameter. His tools used to carve the pole were a knife, chisel and gouger.

San Antonio Zoo Adds Valuable Parrot

Way to True Accomplishment

Taken from the Christian Science Monitor.

MANY today are beginning to see that there is something wrong with the world's way of doing things, and that there must be a radical change if conditions are to become better. Consequently many are turning from a material to a spiritual basis of thinking. Because of this, there has been much overturning of material theories, through a readjustment of ideas as to cause and effect, and values.

Some who have worked hard have of late failed to achieve any measure of success. Certainly right activity should accomplish something; it should enable one to achieve success. True activity, however, is the result of right thinking; and only through right thinking can anything worth while be accomplished. If belief in the reality of matter is the basis of thinking, then thinking is bound to be more or less erroneous.

Nineteen hundred years ago Christ Jesus said, "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing." Mankind has been slow to accept the allness of Spirit, God, as the basis of thinking, and so to see the nothingness of matter. But those who have accepted the allness of the spiritual as their basis of thinking see many encouraging signs indicating a great turning away from dependence upon material ways and means, and a great reaching out for something higher and better than material beliefs afford.

Many who have turned to Christian Science are finding therein the solution to their problems; for Christian Science teaches one how to think correctly, and thus to be directed to do the intelligent thing leading to right accomplishment. It illumines the statement of the great Teacher, "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing."

Christian Science shows one how to think from the basis of Spirit's allness. It reveals the real nature of man and the universe to be spiritual. Accepting God, Spirit, as the one perfect cause, and the spiritual universe and man as the harmonious effect, the student of Christian Science has a perfect foundation on which to become a right thinker. He can begin to gain an understanding of that Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus" and can reject false suggestions of fear, selfishness, greed, lack.

On page 261 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mary Baker Eddy, the discoverer and founder of Christian Science, points out the beneficial result of this kind of thinking when she says, "Hold thought steadfastly to the enduring, the good, and the true, and you will bring these into your experience proportionably to their occupancy of your thoughts."

Those who are learning to dwell on "the enduring, the good, and the true" are grateful to find an unfailing remedy in the correcting of thought through the understanding of the true nature of God and His creation. Through the study of Christian Science this true understanding can be gained, and as the student holds to the true nature of God and His creation he will be guided to do that which will produce right results.

An illustration of the difference between activity which is not governed rightly and activity which is directed by the one perfect cause, by God, Spirit, is found in the twenty-first chapter of the Gospel of John. Certain of the disciples had worked all night without catching any fish, and when the morning came they saw Jesus standing on the shore. Obeying his command to cast their net on the right side of the ship, they found their net was filled with fish. A few minutes of activity governed by right thinking produced what hours of effort without right thinking could not do. Speaking of this, Mrs. Eddy writes (Science and Health, p. 35), "Convinced of the fruitlessness of their toil in the dark and wakened by their Master's voice, they changed their methods, turned away from material things, and cast their net on the right side."

Each one who has toiled in vain has the opportunity to cast the net "on the right side," for Christian Science will enable him to rise above material thinking into spiritual understanding; and this is the way to true accomplishment.

Story Contest Winners Will Be Announced

Free Lance Club Members to Hear How G. A. Lyon Judged Entries.

The winners in the last short story contest will be announced at the meeting of the Free Lance Club, May 12, 8 p. m., at the Sears-Roebuck Art Galleries, 1106 Connecticut avenue. Gideon A. Lyon, contest judge, will talk about how he judged the entries. On account of his experience in literary tournaments of this nature, Mr. Lyon's conclusions on the short story should prove valuable to all writers and the club invites all Washingtonians interested in writing to attend. It is expected that one or two of the prize stories will be read.

An executive meeting was held at the home of the president, Ione Lee Mooney, April 26. Felix Conrad Schwarz, Evelyn Crane, Dr. Andre Beneteau, Mayne Coe and Col. Edmund S. Sayre attended. The report of the proceedings will be announced at the meeting of May 26.

At the meeting of April 28 Benjamin Ferrill read a story called "Trail's End."

Elizabeth Ford, local newspaper writer, read "The Silver Dagger," an ingeniously contrived detective story, which brought out spirited discussion by members.

It was reported that Dr. Andre Beneteau, who is a member of the French Academy, is now engaged in writing the history of the Lafayette Escadrille for Catholic University. Dr. Beneteau's scholarly biography of Rochambeau was published recently.

Bobbie Bray Hayes was approved for active membership. Mrs. Hayes, who is a contributor to national magazines, holds several college degrees, including one from the University of Chicago.

Manor House

The April meeting of Manor House Chapter was held at the home of Mrs. C. L. Garner, with Mrs. C. W. Hassell, Mrs. Davey, and Mrs. Eleanor Collins assisting hostesses. The regent, Miss Lillian Chenoweth, presided and the exercises were opened with prayer and the salute to the flag. The roll call showed several of the officers absent owing to illness. The officers present all gave interesting reports. Mrs. Garner, member of the committee on national defense, gave a splendid account of her committee activities and the treasurer was instructed to pay $2 for the chapter's share in the expense of printing cards for that work. Mrs. Clifton Clark told of the work of the patriotic education committee and Mrs. Hassell of that of the Sons and Daughters of the Republic, speaking particularly of the program arranged by Miss Elizabeth Barnes, chairman, and given at Peck Chapel. Miss Mamie Hawkins, delegate to the national congress, recently in session at Constitution Hall, gave an account of the various sessions, which was both interesting and instructive. The chapter was delighted to know that the little daughter of Mrs. Barton Embry, corresponding secretary of the chapter, was chosen as the member of the C. A. R. to present flowers to Mrs. Hoover. It was stated that Manor House Chapter had been represented at the banquet at the close of the congress, by twenty members, all in Colonial dress. It was announced that the vice regent, Miss Mary Lee Goddard, had been appointed a member of the advisory committee of the Chapter House Corporation. A letter was read from Mrs. Waterman, newly elected president of the corporation, in which she stated that the chapter was entitled to eight biographical sketches in return for the contributions made. A letter to the regent from Hon. Sol Bloom, of the George Washington Bicentennial Commission, was read, thanking the chapter for its cooperation in the production of the Wakefield Masque. The regent announced that a notice of the chapter's thirty-fourth birthday anniversary celebration, together with a picture of the members and the national officers, appeared in the May issue of the D. A. R. Magazine. Five dollars was contributed toward a book plate requested by the library committee. Miss Goddard gave the details of plans for a trip to Wakefield that the chapter members and their friends expect to make a little later in the season. Three new members, Miss Mary Follin, Miss Clara Follin and Miss Margaret Scott, were welcomed into the chapter. At the conclusion of business the guest of honor and speaker of the evening, Mrs. Tonis Holzberg, was introduced. Mrs. Holzberg gave an inspiring talk on "National Defense," and displayed many posters relating to the subject. As Manor House Chapter has always stressed this phase of D. A. R. work, her address was of particular interest. Mrs. Martin Stover, delegate to the congress from Stamp Defiance Chapter, of Wilmington, N. C., told of the origin of the name of her chapter. Miss Dorothy Allen gave several delightful piano selections and Miss Chenoweth, accompanied by Mrs. Clifton Clark, sang a group of songs. The program was followed by a social hour, during which refreshments were served from a beautifully appointed table. Among the guests present were Mrs. Frances Clark, Miss Dessie Clark, Miss Mary Frances Garner, Miss Thelma Thomas and Mrs. Homer Peele.

St. Louis Municipal Opera Plans Twelve

St. Louis (U.P.).—The St. Louis Municipal Opera this season will be the only open air theater production of its kind in the United States.

The two others which have given similar performances previously, the Ravinia Opera in Chicago and the Zoo Opera in Cincinnati, have fallen victims to economic conditions and have been abandoned.

The St. Louis Municipal Opera last season had the best season in its history, making a profit of $30,000 for its sponsors. This year the budget calls for an expenditure of $400,000 upon twelve productions.

What Today Means to You

By MARY BLAKE

"TAURUS."

IF MAY 8 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 8 a. m. to 10 a. m., from 4 p. m. to 5:15 p. m. and from 9:15 p. m. to 10:30 p. m. The danger periods are from noon to 1:15 p. m. and from 8 p. m. to 9 p. m.

The planets are ideally placed on May 8 for a pleasurable Sunday. It will be a short recess between past and future worries, and the mind will be free to focus on the affairs of the moment. Spiritual teachings will be unusually inspirational.

The child born on this May 8 will be rather lacking in ambition and driving force. It will be an apt student, and will react favorably to encouragement and suggestion. There is every indication that it eventually will land on its feet, and will be more than worthy of the name it bears.

Born on May 8, you do not have a palsied grasp of life, nor a jaundiced outlook. You are an unusually solid, clear-eyed, knowable being. Life is considerable of a gamble with you, and you have never wished to lower a permanent anchorage. You are not childish or amateurish, however, in your adventures, and study your ground thoroughly before you ever attempt to make a landing.

Problems are the meat and drink of your life, the right of food to keep one of your temperament both youthful and active. Life would be tame if you did not have something or somebody to tackle. You worship good health too much to ever become emasculated through gross intemperance in any form. You have many minor vices, but they will be more foolish than harmful. You are very fond of handling people, and although your touch is firm, there is too much skill and diplomacy back of it for it to ever become rough or displeasing. You create confidence in your fellow-associates, merit their respect and often win their love.

Your temper occasionally gets in creases, but it is easily smoothed out. A real emotional storm always leaves you limp and ill, and you try to avoid them. You belong too much to the public to lead a secluded home life.

Successful people born on May 8:

1—Frank George Carpenter, traveler.

2—Robert Ingersoll Aitken, sculptor.

3—William H. Gottschalk, financier.

4—Louis M. Gottschalk, pianist and composer.

5—Charles F. Naegele, artist.

6—George Miller Beard, physician.

How to Keep Well

By DR. W. A. EVANS

SOMETHING ABOUT HIVES.

A LADY wants an article on urticaria. This is the scientific name for an old and very annoying enemy—hives or nettle rash.

There is just one new point to write about and that is not proved. There is more than one kind of urticaria, or nettle rash, and this new point may apply in spots. Most of the nettle rashes are caused by eating some form of protein or albuminous food. Some get it when they eat eggs, others when they eat fish; but whatever the harmful food the part that does the damage is the albumin. It is known that albumin is not always the same. In fact, we speak of the albumins, meaning that there are a great group of them. Furthermore, we know that an albumin which we think of as one chemical substanace is really a combination of about twenty chemical substances called amines. The difference between albumins is partly due to the various amines that enter into the recipes used. One of these amines is called histamine.

Histamine has been separated out just as morphine has been separated from opium. It is used to cause the stomach to secrete gastric juice and for other purposes. One of the effects is to produce nettle rash. The new point about urticaria is that those people who are prone to develop it when they eat certain foods have acquired a way of separating histamine in the process of nutrition, and that when they split this substance away from the meat of, let us say, fish, they have an attack of hives.

If this point should be established, the next search of the investigators would be to find an antidote for histamine. This may prove a hard job for the scientists, but it will be no harder than the job the sufferer now has of having skin tests to discover what poisons him; or, what is more difficult still, to change his habits, his food, his animal friends, or his home in order to escape the cause of his trouble.

Scratching is not altogether unpleasant. In fact, the psychologists, after writing encyclopedias on the subject, now tell us that scratching, within limitations, is a source of pleasure. The dog scratching for fleas is not as unhappy as the doggerel would cause us to infer. It is the inability to resist the impulse to indulge a pleasurable sensation that makes the urticaria urge a nuisance. It is bad form to scratch in public. A man is very happy when he is drunk, but the inability to restrain his urge to be happy may make him very unhappy.

Poor, weak men with the hives may find the best way to escape the temptation to scratch is to take a dose of some newly discovered histamine antitoxin or specific antisubstance of some kind. Until that time comes the proper policy for a man who is subject to the hives is to recognize that he is different. His difference is due to some peculiarity in his chemistry or in his chemical processes. The difference shows itself in some way in his vasomotor nerves. He has patches of swelling due to unusual flushing of his capillaries in some parts of his skin, or, maybe, in his air passages. When the patches are in his skin he has local redness, swelling and itching. In most instances he can discover by trial and error what sets off his trigger, even though he can not discover how he is different in his complex chemistry. If he discovers this, it is up to him to go down the middle of the road.

DON'T LISTEN TO IT.

Mrs. A. D. M. writes: Is there any cure for ringing in the ears? I have had it for some time and no physician seems to be able to either tell me the cause or relieve it in any way. It has a tendency to make me very nervous.

REPLY.

The advice we commonly give sufferers from this discomfort is to train themselves to disregard this apparent noise, as they have done with most of the real noises they hear. This is good advice 99 times in 100. It is good advice in your case. Some of the physicians who have examined you would have found a removable cause had there been one.

The most common cause is change in the bones of the ear.

OPERATION NEEDED.

Mrs. B. writes: Is there any way in which to cure a fistula without an operation? I have been told that it can be dried up and that it will not come back. Is that true?

REPLY.

The only cure that can be depended on is operation. Injection of bismuth paste is one of the operations that is used. The usually employed operation consists in opening up the tract.

Officers for the ensuing year will be elected at the annual meeting of the Community Chest Board of Trustees, Wednesday at 4:30 p. m., at the United States Chamber of Commerce Building, Seventeenth and H streets. A president, secretary and treasurer are to be selected.

The board will discuss the economy program of the Chest and its member organizations, deciding how far this program shall be carried out in view of the serious handicap to social work presented by several of the plans under consideration. The agencies have already cut their budgets by 7 per cent to meet the pledges made to the Chest in the 1932 campaign, which fell short of its goal of $2,601,000 by about 7 per cent.

Increasing demands for aid, largely the result of the unemployment situation, have so increased the needs of the family welfare organizations that at the present rate of expenditure the Chest faces a deficit of about $300,000 on the year. In order to help meet this deficit Chest organizations have appointed an economy committee, which, in conference with the members of the budget committee, is endeavoring to reduce expenses still further. It was pointed out, however, that the budgets of 1932, as fixed by the committee, already were as low as they could consistently be brought and still accomplish the tasks confronting them. Since that time they have taken a reduction of 7 per cent, and any further reductions, organization officials said, must be made at the expense of the social work program for the community.

Six Trustees to Be Elected.

In addition to officers, there will be elected six more members of the board of trustees, which is at present constituted of the following:

Beggar Potential Criminal, Declares Park Police Head

Members of Professional Mendicant Army Often "Earn" $50 to $60 Daily and Should Be Jailed, Says Montgomery, Who Sees New Invasion.

"Beware of the panhandler, the pencil vender and all professional mendicants. They are all potential criminals," Capt. Ray C. Montgomery, superintendent of the U. S. park police, advises.

Capt. Montgomery revealed that an army of professional beggars was in Washington last winter, and he is making preparations for as large an invasion this summer.

"They find Washington easy pickings," he explained.

The park police captain has plain clothes men assigned to the parks every night, but even these precautions have not been sufficient to cope with the situation, Capt. Montgomery said.

"These racketeers of the streets and parks, who are trained in the technique of extracting hard-earned dimes from Washington workers, take thousands of dollars out of Washington each season," Capt. Montgomery declared. "Many of them earn as much as $50 or $60 a day. They don't deserve any sympathy. They are not unfortunates, but as much crooks as safe crackers and house robbers."

Capt. Montgomery pointed out that the real unfortunate who tries to beg on the streets or sell pencils is quickly put out of business by the professional. "A great many of the so-called veterans selling pamphlets," he said, "may be veterans, but most of them were forced into the army and spent the majority of their time in the guardhouse. They were a burden to military service. Some of the veterans are legitimate, and I don't wish to throw any criticism on these worthy ones."

The right place for the professional mendicant, in Capt. Montgomery's opinion, is a jail or charitable institution, where they can get three meals a day. Better still, he believes, is that they be ostracized from Washington, and he wants the people of Washington—who have contributed to the Community Chest—to cooperate with him by shunning the man who shuffles up to you on the street and whines:

"Got a dime for a cuppa coffee, mister?"

"It's all sob stuff," said the park police captain, who is far from being a hard-boiled cop. "It's a safe bet they've had more to eat than the man or woman accosted, and needs the dime as a contribution toward a shot of dope or a pint of liquor. Most of these birds have more money in their pockets when they are asking for a dime than the man they are begging from."

Old Suits Garb Wealthiest Man, Who Hoards Fortune

While Vaults Bulge With Hundreds of Millions Dollars' Worth of Jewels, Maharaja Drives 1927 Car and Lives in Penurious Style.

Hyderabad, India (A.P.).—The world's richest man watches his pennies and wears old clothes.

Wealthiest and most powerful of India's 700 maharajas, ruling princes and tribal chiefs is his exalted highness, the Nizam of Hyderabad, largest state in India.

He is owner of the renowned Golconda diamond fields.

With the subterranean vaults and caves of his great palace here bulging with several hundred million dollars' worth of gold bullion, diamonds, rubies, sapphires and other treasures, and with an annual income from his estates of something like $25,000,000, the nizam is said to be much richer than John D. Rockefeller, Henry Ford or any of the American multimillionaires.

In the war he gave many millions to the British cause, in recognition of which King George of England gave the nizam the title of "Exalted Highness," and allowed him to sign himself "Faithful Ally of the King-Emperor."

All the other 700-odd princes in India have the title only of "His Highness."

The nizam comes from one of the most illustrious families in India, claiming descent on his father's side from Hazrat Abu Bakr Siddiq, the first khalifa of the Prophet Mahomet, and on his mother's side from the prophet himself.

The nizam is one of the most romantic figures in the modern world. He is just past 45. He has eleven palaces in India and is reputed to keep a harem of 50 wives. His late father, who ruled the state for many years, had 300 concubines.

Controlling the famous Golconda Diamond Mines, he owns some of the most precious stones in the world. The great Koh-I-Noor diamond, one of the most famous jewels belonging to Queen Mary of England, came originally from the Hyderabad collection and is valued at $25,000,000.

It would be natural to assume that, in view of the nizam's staggering wealth, he lived in the most luxurious magnificence. It is almost the opposite. Simplicity and plainness to the point of austerity characterize his life. Americans would call him "stingy." Indeed, he is known throughout India as "the Miser-Maharaja," for he counts the pennies and lets the dollars take care of themselves.

Many stories are told of the maharaja's penuriousness. One is that he once spotted a four-anna silver coin (about 8 cents) on the sidewalk outside his palace. He put his foot over the coin, then glanced around to see that no one was looking and quickly picked it up, keeping it as a talisman.

Certainly, the nizam himself is most frugal in the matter of dress. He may be seen any day at the palace in an old faded and threadbare coat. Although of simple tastes himself, the nizam entertains his guests in the most lavish manner. Their meals are served on plates of solid gold.

PROBLEMS OF NEGRO WILL BE DISCUSSED

U. S. Association Parley to Be Addressed by Reichelderfer.

Practically every phase of the status of the Negro, nationally and internationally, will be discussed here at the twenty-third annual session May 17 to 22, of the National Association for Advancement of Colored People, Archibald S. Pinkett announced yesterday. Dr. Luther Reichelderfer, chairman of the Board of Commissioners, has accepted an invitation to be present on the opening night of the conference, and will welcome the gathering on behalf of the municipal government.

The auditorium of the new Department of Commerce Building has been granted for the Friday night meeting of the association, May 20, when the Spingarn Medal will be presented to Dr. Robert Russa Moton, head of Tuskegee Institute, by Senator Bronson M. Cutting, of New Mexico. The award was made recently on account of Dr. Moton's activity in interracial cooperation in the South, and his successful dealing with the Ku Klux Klan at Tuskegee which appeared imminent during establishment of a colored personnel in the veterans' hospital there.

Tributes of honor will be given two outstanding exponents of abolition of slavery in America—Frederick Douglass, whose home at Cedar Hill, Anacostia, has been developed as a national shrine, and John Brown, of Ossawatomie. The Douglass tribute will be paid by M. Dantes Bellegarde, Haitian Minister, and Dr. Carter G. Woodson, at a sunrise service, May 22, at Cedar Hill. John Brown will be honored at Storer College. Harpers Ferry, where the association had its birth, the principal speakers being Oswald Garrison Villard and W. E. B. DuBois, his biographers.

Outstanding among the social events of the session will be a tea given in the Friends Meeting House, Twentieth street and Florida avenue, northwest, on Thursday, May 19, from 4 to 6 o'clock, by the interracial committee of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, incident to three meetings of the Society of Friends to be held here at this time.

Alpha Sigma Lambda Plans for Convention

Besides Mr. Newman, members of the convention committee include F. Edwin Dieste, chairman; F. George Clendaniel, Thomas Costagini, Sam Shreve and Harold J. Goebel, all of Washington, and J. Robert Sherwood, Mount Rainier, Md., and Stewart J. Kneessi and George B. Earnshaw, of Riverdale, Md.

'ATONEMENT' TO BE GIVEN BY SINGERS

Musical Art Society to Render Oratorio as Part of Bicentennial.

A group of 75 colored singers, the Musical Art Society, composed in part of students of Howard University, will render "The Atonement," by Samuel Coleridge Taylor, Negro composer of England, under direction of Roy W. Tibbs, at the Metropolitan Church, M street, between Fifteenth and Sixteenth streets, next Thursday evening.

This concert is sponsored by a committee, coordinating activities of Negro groups, in connection with the George Washington Bicentennial celebration. The oratorio is a massive, but sincere choral setting of the passion of Christ, set to original verses rather than scriptural texts.

Soloists who have been selected include R. Todd Duncan, barytone; Virginia Quivers, soprano; Ethyl Wise, mezzo soprano; Lexington Smith, tenor; Maude Smothers, soprano. Dr. Melville Charlton, of New York, will be the guest organist.

The committee in charge of arrangements for this presentation include Virginia L. Williams, E. R. Amos, M. L. Europe, L. D. Hopkins, Sylvia W. Olden, L. E. Smith, Della Bundy Wilson, J. T. PROGRAM PLANNED FOR HOSPITAL DAY

Presentation of Respirator to Children's Institution by Rotary Is Feature.

Formal presentation of one of the newest types of the Drinker respirator to Children's Hospital by S. Percy Thompson, president of the Rotary Club, on behalf of the club, and acceptance by O. H. P. Johnson, president of the Children's Hospital board of directors, will mark the celebration of National Hospital Day at that hospital next Thursday. A number of Rotarians and friends of the hospital are expected to be present for the presentation. The respirator is already installed at the hospital.

National Hospital Day, which marks the birthday of Florence Nightingale, famous nurse, has been officially proclaimed for Thursday by President Hoover. The local hospitals all hold open house on that date and will welcome visitors.

Children's Hospital, in addition to the presentation of the respirator, will hold a children's garden party for the youngsters who attend the clinics. Teachers from both white and colored schools volunteer for the occasion, supervising the play of the youngsters. There will be the usual games, a treasure hunt and many other features designed especially for the children. Miss Mattie Gibson, superintendent, and other hospital officials will hold a reception for adults who wish to visit the hospital on that day.

"Home Coming Day" will be observed at the National Homeopathic Hospital, the day being featured by the return of babies born in the hospital, especially those born during the last year. Mrs. Wilson A. Coleman, superintendent, and members of the staff, will hold a reception for mothers and children throughout the day, with a tea in the nurses' home at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Milk will be provided for the babies.

Only these two of the nine hospitals in the Community Chest are mapping any particular program for the day, the other seven hospitals holding open house only and being prepared to show visitors over the buildings.

GREEN LINEN FOR SPRING

Tangerine Chairs and Gay Napkins Set Style

Long-handled silver has come to stay.

By HOPE HAMMOND.

Interior Furnishings Editor, the Woman's Home Companion, Written for The Washington Post.

Milady's informal luncheon or dinner table grows more and more colorful. Accessories are becoming more picturesque and informal.

Ecru mats and napkins in green striped material are the very latest spring offering. Plated flat silver in modernistic designs is entirely compatible with furnishings of almost any period.

Among the new designs in flat silver is the short-pronged, long-handled fork and its accompanying knife in matching proportions, with a nontarnishable steel blade. These revolutionary changes in the time-honored implements of mealtime evidently have come to stay.

Pewter plates maintain their popularity for the soft luster which blends appropriately with the brilliant colored glass now so much in favor.

Color is being emphasized in the leather upholstery of the newest dining table chairs. Tangerine feather, for instance, is an innovation which seems to have much to commend it as a decorative note of high importance, in a room which has for many generations been too dull and somber.

St. Louis (A.P.).—To tumble down a mountain side tussling with a large diamond-back rattlesnake is all in the day's work, says Moody J. R. Lentz, assistant herpetologist of the St. Louis Zoo.

Mr Lentz was alone on a steep, shale-covered side of Rattlesnake mountain, near Little Rock, when he discovered a large diamond-back rattler After he had pinned its head down and picked it up, he slipped and began sliding down the mountain, the rattler lashing wildly

Finally Mr. Lentz had to release his hold and when he landed the snake was just above him Half coiling it struck at the herpetologist's throat and narrowly missed. The snake rapidly coiled and struck again just as Mr. Lentz rolled out of reach

Dr. Hewett took issue with archaeologists who have interpreted the Monte Alban tomb as the burial place of a high priest

"The material found in the tomb, whether it be Mintec, Zapotec or Aztec, is not of the character of a medicine man's outfit, which among all Indian tribes and communities from New Mexico to Peru must contain certain characteristic objects for ritualistic purposes," said Dr. Hewett. "Such objects appear to be absent from the Monte Alban finds."

LONG BEACH OPENED IN CALVERT COUNTY

Old Cherry Lane Property Made Available for Salt-Water Sites.

A bit of historic old Maryland, lying on the sandy shores of Chesapeake Bay in Calvert County, is being made available for the vacationist by the Long Beach Co., of Washington. Few residents of the District of Columbia are aware of the beauty spots along the lower reaches of this peninsula for the reason that much of the property has been held in large estates.

Long Beach, so called because of its 8½ miles of clean, white sand, is one of these hidden gems hitherto unknown. For the past four weeks, the developers have had 100 men clearing roads and opening up the first section of their tract so that the engineers could lay out the building sites. Now all is in readiness for this latest of beach developments, and the public has been invited to attend the formal opening of Long Beach today.

Covers Historic Ground.

Since the opening of the State highway link No. 416, a new concrete road, all of this lower peninsula property has been brought nearer Washington. Calvert County, dating back to 1642, with its wealth of interesting history, is beginning to draw heavily on District residents who are seeking salt-water sites for their summer homes.

Long Beach is located on the old Cherry Lane estate, which has just been made available for the developer through a break-up of an old family's vast holdings. Former State Representative Tom Parran was one of the original owners of this beautiful tract, which lies just 4,200 feet off the main State highway. The beach is reached via Upper Marlboro, Chain highway, across the Patuxent and then south on Route 416 and Route 2, through Prince Frederick, the county seat of Calvert County. The entrance to Long Beach is 8 miles below Prince Frederick, and an information office is maintained at the Calvert Hotel in Prince Frederick.

170 Acres in First Section.

The first section of Long Beach that is now open for the public consists of 170 acres with a beach front of 3,000 feet. It is all well-wooded with a wide variety of trees and shrubbery. The beach is clean, there are no bluffs and no mud. The sum of $35,000 is being spent in the clearing of roads and other necessary work on this first unit and already the land is taking on the character of a great park with many attractive vistas.

Affairs of the Long Beach Co. in Prince Frederick are being handled oy John B. Gray, jr., assistant attorney general for the State of Maryland. The Long Beach Co. is owned by Washington residents. Title to the property sold will be protected by insured certificates of title, issued through Mr. Gray's office.

Already the Long Beach Co. reports an excellent preliminary interest in their development on the part of residents of the District, with a number of sales already closed prior to the public opening. The company has constructed a pavilion for the care of its guests and a pier and other necessary adjuncts will be built right away. Offices in Washington are maintained in the Metropolitan National Bank Building.

College Editors Fight For Freedom of Press

Fairmont, W. Va. (U.P.).—A double blow was struck at faculty censorship of college publications at the eleventh annual convention of the Intercollegiate Press Association here.

Delegates unanimously passed a resolution pledging the association to work for freedom of the press and elected as their president one of the leaders in the movement, Charles McGhee, Wayne County.

McGhee, a junior at Marshall College and a leader in the move to eliminate "unduly tyrannical" censorship, said there was no controversy over the question at Marshall College. He is news editor of the Parthenon, weekly paper of Marshall College.

Most of the college editors attending the convention admitted censorship existed at their respective schools.

NEW LIFETIME HOME READY NEXT SUNDAY

Large Crowds Are Expected to Visit Post-Sponsored Cafritz Residence.

With just a few finishing touches to complete the work, the Cafritz organization has announced that its modern lifetime home at Forty-sixth and Davenport streets northwest will be ready for public inspection next Sunday. This charming home is a new development by Cafritz, featuring the latest trend in design, construction, plan, finish and equipment, is sponsored by The Washington Post.

No detail has been overlooked in presenting a home that will charm and interest Washington home lovers with its many innovations and delight them with its inherent beauty and harmony of color. Styles in homes, as the styles in clothes, change with the times, and the Cafritz organization in the modern lifetime home has planned and furnished a residence in keeping with today's tempo.

The Washington Post will describe, in detail, the construction of this home, its plan, furnishings and equipment, in a series of articles appearing each Sunday in the real estate section.

Model homes have always met with an enthusiastic response by the Washington public. Homes featured by Cafritz in the past have given the opportunity to thousands of visitors to examine them completely. It is expected that the response to the modern lifetime home will be even greater than that accorded other exhibits, and careful preparation has been made to receive the large numbers that are expected to be present.

Ice Picks Assume New Domestic Role

Austin, Tex. (U.P.).—The ice pick is playing a prominent part in home and industry these days.

It has replaced the old-fashioned rolling pin as arbiter of domestic disputes, according to police records here.

An ice pick marked "Lone Star Ice Co., Austin, Tex.," also was found in the jungles of the Belgian Congo. Catherine Minter, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. W. R. Minter here, saw a native using it to carve tiny ivory elephants. No one knows how it came into his hands.

FIRM WILL AUCTION HIGHLAND PARK LOTS

40 in Nearby Virginia to Go Under Hammer Beginning May 14.

The National Realty & Development Co., of Louisville, Ky., announces an auction sale of 40 choice residential and business lots in its new development. "Highland Park" subdivision. The property is located in Virginia on Memorial Drive about one-half a mile east of Falls Church. According to the announcement, the sale will be held on the property, rain or shine, beginning Saturday, May 14, at 1:30 p. m. and continue until all lots are sold.

A unique feature of the operations of this firm, it is said, is that during its history of auction sales for more than 20 years and in as many States, the firm has never taken a piece of property for sale unless the owner agreed to let the property go to the highest bidder, regardless of price.

"A sales of this character," says W. B. RoBards, president of the firm, "is of great importance to every citizen and property-owner in this community as well as to prospective purchasers. It is a true, unbiased appraisal of real estate on this market made by the public, which is the ultimate consumer or user of real estate."

Highland Park is situated in the pleasant wooded section of Virginia, just across the Potomac River from Washington. This section has for years attracted Washingtonians with its beautiful rolling hills which are so susceptible to landscaping and alluring as a home community.

Hungry Fish Kept Angler Famished

San Leandro, Calif. (U.P.).—It started as just another fishing trip It ended as a massacre.

'I caught a whole lot of them and then tried to eat a sandwich, but another one took my bait, and I lost the sandwich hauling it in," complained Fisherman Fred Hirschmann. "Then I tried to drink a glass of milk, but the line pulled again and I lost the glass landing him."

The first of the catch, he said, was just "a little one—3 feet long. The second was the largest of the lot—4½ feet long."

And Fisherman Hirschmann returned with a boatload—of 22 sharks and 14 sting rays. He gave them to a poultryman for chicken feed.

Conversational Ability Saved Till Receipts

Ogden, Utah (U.P.).—Ensign Terry's conversational ability served to keep his cash register intact during a robbery.

Two robbers entered Terry's service station and demanded money. Terry began to talk. His conversation interested the thieves and slowed up their robbery.

Eventually prospective customers noticed Terry's plight and reported to police. The robbers escaped—but without money.

Milk Shower Brought Out Salinas' Cats

Salinas, Calif. (U.P.).—It rained milk and cats on one of Salinas' business streets here recently to such an extent that police had to deal with the situation.

A milk truck struck a bump in the pavement. Part of its load bounced off, the bottles broke, and the milk flowed into a pool.

Then came the deluge of cats. From every alley and street they poured into the road, lapping up the milk. Police finally chased them away so traffic could be resumed.

44 HOMES ERECTED IN SPRING VALLEY

Improvements Since 1929 Represent Investment of $4,000,000.

Since the spring of 1929, when the first resident moved into Spring Valley, the W. C. & A. N. Miller development, 44 homes have been built ranging in price from $30,000 to $175,000, and representing in homes and improvements an investment upward of $4,000,000. If there has existed an economic depression there is no evidence of it whatever in Spring Valley, where building activities continue at an amazing rate and where the homes in almost every instance have sold prior to completion.

Many beautiful specimens of the native flowering dogwood are to be found in Spring Valley. In grading for new streets the engineers have given special thought to saving the dogwood trees, with the result that most of the largest specimens have been preserved. It is generally conceded that nature provides no trees nor shrubbery quite so beautiful and graceful as the dogwood tree, perhaps more beautiful in Spring Valley because they remain undisturbed and do not have the stilted effect of the cultivated shade trees.

Tract Contains 79 Acres.

The first step in the creation of Spring Valley was taken in the summer of 1926, when a tract of 79 acres, fronting on Loughborough road, was purchased from Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Spaulding. This was followed in May, 1927, by the purchase from Charles C. Glover, of a small tract of six acres. In August, 1928, a tract of 117 acres was acquired from the Loughborough Development Co., adding to the parcel all the land from Loughborough road to Massachusetts avenues, with the exception of approximately 28 acres, which subsequently was purchased from Horace D. Waters. In June, 1928, seven acres were purchased from John R. Scott. And in March, 1928, the problem of tying this newly acquired area into the Wesley Heights development was solved by the purchase of approximately 15 acres from Baer & Scholz. These various transactions completed, the result was an uninterrupted tract of more than 300 acres.

Following the acquisition of the land, came the problem of deciding upon the type of development which best would interpret the ideals of its developers. Before any actual plans were made, careful study was given to the best examples of the city planners' and landscape architects' skill, in such nationally known and highly regarded residential subdivisions as Shaker Heights in Cleveland, the J. C. Nichols development in the Country Club District of Kansas City, the Roland Park, Guilford and Homeland developments in Baltimore, the Jemison development in Birmingham, the Country Club District of Louisville, and the suburban developments of Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Denver.

Section Under Restriction.

The protective covenants, running with the land, are such that an owner may be assured of proper development of the neighboring lots. These protective covenants are unusual for Washington. There are limitations as to areas upon which houses shall be built; a covenant against the use of anything but smoke-free fuel; a covenant against the building of fences and walls unless approved; a covenant against the display of signs—such as so often mar the appearance of our suburbs, and covenants covering the architecture, grading and colors of houses. All plans and specifications must be lodged with the company before construction may be started. It is estimated that the development of the property will add a taxable value to the District of Columbia real estate of approximately $20,000,000.

John H. Small 3d, prominent in the field of landscape architecture in Washington, has been appointed landscape architect for Spring Valley. Mr. Small, in cooperation with W. C. & A. N. Miller, has spent more than a year in intensive study, devising plans to develop the property in a manner to best express the most modern combination of utility, beauty and stability in residential subdivision planning.

The history of Washington—as well as of a great many other American cities—is said to demonstrate that the best development occurs in a northwesterly direction. Spring Valley, lying as it does in the path of what is said to be the finest progress in the city, comprises the last large single tract which can be opened for development in that direction. Along Sixteenth street, Connecticut and Wisconsin avenues northwest, the city is said to have already developed to a much greater distance than it has along Massachusetts avenue. This may be attributed to the fact that prior to the development of Wesley Heights, no suitable transportation was available for that area.

Now, however, this whole section is served by de luxe buses, running on frequent schedule, and controlled by the Washington Railway & Electric Co. The time required for a bus trip from this section to midtown is twelve to fourteen minutes. The distance is approximately four miles from the White House. The property extends from Massachusetts avenue to the Dalecarlia Reservoir grounds, fronting on the Loughborough road and immediately adjoining the Wesley Heights development, of which it is in reality a part, on the west.

The elevation of Spring Valley is from 230 to 360 feet above sea level. It is covered with what is regarded as probably the finest stand of timber remaining in the District of Columbia, including red, white and black oak, beech, walnut, tulip poplar, wild cherry, dogwood, pine and cedar trees.

Of the families who have already established homes in Spring Valley, Lanier P. McLachlen, president of the McLachlen Banking Corporation, was the first. He was followed in less than a month by George O. Vass, vice president and cashier of the Riggs National Bank. Next came Alfred H. Lawson, vice president and real estate officer of the Washington Loan & Trust Co.; Arthur B. Heaton, prominent local architect, and Dr. Samuel A. Alexander.

HOME LOAN PLAN'S VALUE TOLD HOOVER

Directors of Real Estate Boards Wire President Listing Need of Bill.

Chicago, Ill., May 7.—Calling attention to the fact that every day's delay in the passage of the proposed home loan bank bill is increasing the loss of homes by foreclosure due to the present abnormal lack of money for the refinancing of urban mortgages, the board of directors of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, at the closing session of its regular quarterly meeting, held in Chicago recently, sent a telegraphic communication to President Hoover urging him to again bring to the attention of Congress the great need for immediate passage of the bill.

The 37 officers and directors of the association present, representing cities of every section of the country and backed by familiarity with conditions in every State in the Union, were unanimous in their action, taken in the following resolution addressed to the President:

Whereas: In the early days of the present Congress, you in your capacity of President presented to Congress an economic program, the passage of which, in your judgment, was necessary to stay the panic which had seized the people, to relieve the acute and immediate causes of depression and to lay the foundation on which a sound and permanent business and economic structure could be built, and

Whereas: Congress has seen fit to cooperate with you in a most patriotic and nonpartisan way to relieve the present distressing situation, by passing great constructive measures recommended by you, yet they have failed to pass the Federal home loan bank bill which is especially intended to relieve the thousands upon thousands of home owners who are losing their homes by reason of inability to refinance same and who are thus seeing the hard-earned savings of years wiped away, and Liquidations of Institutions.

Whereas: Due to the liquidation of financial institutions which have closed or which have suspended payments and find it necessary to raise funds as soon as possible in order that payments to their customers may be resumed, it has become necessary to foreclose mortgages upon tens of thousands of homes, many of which mortgages are perfectly safe and would be paid and thus their homes saved to the owners if refinancing could be secured, and

Whereas: Every day's delay in the passage of the Federal Home Loan Bank bill is increasing the number of foreclosures and bringing ruin and distress to additional thousands of the small home owners of our country, and

Whereas: Mortgage money for every purpose, whether it is for refinancing sound mortgages or furnishing capital for persons desiring to build homes for themselves is each day becoming more difficult to secure,

Therefore, be it resolved by the board of directors of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, assembled in their quarterly meeting in Chicago, that the President of the United States be requested to again bring to the attention of Congress the great need for the immediate consideration and passage of the Federal Home Loan Bank bill, the hearings on which have been completed by the banking and currency committee of both branches of Congress.

Discount System Planned.

The measure would set up a discount system for institutions making mortgage loans on urban homes, the system to be paid for by the institutions using it. As recommended by the subcommittee of the House banking and currency committee, which held hearings on the bill, the measure has been amended to provide that Federal funds for initial capital come from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. This Federal fund is to be retired as soon as membership stock subscription is sufficient to bring the capitalization of the proposed banks to $150,000,000.

The entire program of activities of the national association was reviewed in detail by the board of directors at the current quarterly meeting. Action was taken to strengthen the work of the association and of its member boards in meeting the present general business situation. Work reviewed included:

1. A proposed national conference on housing, to be held in Cincinnati in connection with the annual convention of the association there June 29, 30, and July 1.

2. Proposed local housing conferences and other measures to advance a wider home ownership. Plans for the national conference and suggested plans for the proposed chain of local conferences to get at the actual present needs of each community, both in relation to present homes and to future construction, were outlined by the association's new committee on housing, which met in Chicago immediately preceding the meeting of the board of directors.

Distinctly Professional Group.

3. Proposed charter and by-laws of the American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers of the National Association of Real Estate Boards. In this institution is culminated the intensive work of the association for the last four years for the establishment of better knowledge of real estate appraisal and definite standards of sound appraisal practice. The new institute, details for which are now being worked out, is organized as a distinctly professional group, with power to certify appraisers who meet its tests as to competence and responsibility. The sound organization of this important new professional body is recognized by the association as one of the most important measures now under way for the advancement of real estate practice and service. The proposed charter will come up for adoption at the organization meeting of the institute to be held in connection with the coming annual convention of the association at Cincinnati. Action of the institute on charter and by-laws must be confirmed by action of the board of directors of the association. Rules for examination of candidates for membership were tentatively outlined at a committee meeting of the institute's temporary membership committee, held preceding the current meeting of the association's board of directors.

4. Status of pending Federal legislation in regard to which the association has taken action on behalf of real estate boards and real estate owners. This includes (a) the pending home loan bank bill, (b) the Federal revenue bill, in regard to which the association asks that the law be clarified so as to permit capitalization of carrying charges in estimating taxable capital gains; (c) the proposed emergency stamp tax on real estate conveyances, which the association protests, as giving opportunity for fraud in relation to real estate values, a disadvantage out of all proportion to the revenue to be gained, which it estimates would under present conditions be not more than two or three million dollars.

5. Business building services of the association, as carried directly to members of its various specialized divisions.

Conferences on Sales.

6. Sales conferences, all-day discussions of present most effective sales methods, which are being held over the country under joint auspices of the national association and local member boards.

7. Statistical studies of the association.

8. Work for a better tax situation for real estate, now recognized generally as the outstanding tax problem of the country, and the outstanding need of real estate as a

REALTOR COMMENDS BLAINE RELEASE BILL

Board's Publication Asserts It Affords Adequate Public Protection.

The Washington Realtor, official publication of the Washington Real Estate Board, in its current issue, analyzes the Blaine release bill in the following manner:

"The Blaine real estate release bill is right in principle, workable in practice and will afford adequate protection to the public. Its provisions go direct to the source of two evils: namely, fraudulent releasing of deeds of trust and the issuance of duplicate notes. In practice, it increases slightly the cost of recording deeds of trust and releases thereof, places some burden of inconvenience on those handling real estate transactions, and will require generally a greater measure of care in the preparation of real estate conveyances.

"With certain exemptions and except upon order of the court this legislation will require all real estate notes to be identified by the recorder of deeds at the time the deed of trust is recorded. This requirement applies to both first deeds of trust and subsequent deeds of trust, and whether they secure borrowed money or deferred purchase payments. The identification must follow a form specifically set out in the bill and must be signed by the recorder or one authorized by law to sign for him.

"Except upon order of court and in certain other exempted cases, the recorder can not record any deed or release of trust until all of the notes secured thereby have been presented to him marked 'paid' and duly canceled. Provision has been made for cases wherein the note has been lost or is otherwise unavailable. In such instances the release may be recorded when a proper bond is filed with the recorder or a sufficient sum of money has been deposited in the registry of the court. The detail method to be pursued is specifically outlined.

Partial Releases.

"Partial releases presented the most difficult phase of the drafting of this legislation, yet the sections covering this type of release provide a definite means for handling any partial release with both facility and ample safeguards. Where partial releases are based on the actual payment of part of the debt the recorder may record the release upon presentation to him of satisfactory evidence of the payment. In all other instances the recording of partial releases must be by order of court.

"Both the identification of notes and the presentation of canceled notes, as well as the procedure for partial releasing may be avoided by using as a trustee a banking institution coming under the supervision of the comptroller of the currency. These three requirements of the law also do not apply to deeds of trust of public utility corporations nor to any release thereof. When a banking institution, or so-called 'corporate trustee,' is used it must accept the trusteeship by its signature and seal to the deed of trust before recording.

"The three basic principles of this legislation deal with the matter of fraudulent releasing. It is designed to prevent fraudulent releasing of deeds of trust in cases where the money covering the payment of the notes has been deposited with the house issuing the notes, although not actually remitted to the holders of the notes. Any clause in a deed of trust permitting a release when the funds are so deposited is declared invalid unless a banking institution under the supervision of the comptroller of the currency is named as the depository and where such banking institution accepts as such depository by its signature and seal to the deed of trust before it is actually recorded.

Fees Provided.

"In addition to the customary fees now charged for the recording of deeds of trust and releases this legislation provides a minimum fee of $1 for identifying notes in cases where there is only one note, with a further fee of 10 cents for the identification of each additional note secured under the deed of trust. In the presentation of notes for release the additional fee is 50 cents for the first note presented and 5 cents for each additional note presented.

"As the law specifically provides that the recorder of deeds shall not accept for record nor record any deed of trust or release except in compliance with the terms of the law, there is no impairment or involvement of title procedure. All requirements of the law must be complied with before the papers are recorded.

The Blaine release bill is not retroactive and its provisions become effective 90 days after passage. It is believed that this period will give sufficient time to the recorder of deeds to become equipped to perform his new duties and to readjust the terminology of deed of trust forms and release forms so that the supply can be replenished and a new form of note developed designed to accommodate the identification of the recorder which can be imprinted on the note with sufficient blank spaces to insert in writing the identifying information and signature of the recorder.

"In view of the fact that this legislation affects all deeds of trust and releases it is important that brokers as well as mortgage finance offices become familiar with the provisions so that they may adjust their work quickly in the event the bill becomes a law."

commodity. The directors particularly reviewed:

(a) The research in present State laws affecting real estate taxation, now being completed at the University of Chicago under the direction of Dr. Simeon E. Leland. This study, the most comprehensive ever to be made of the actual working of recent new types of legislation aiming at wider or more equitable tax distribution, budget control and cutting of tax costs, has already become the foundation for actual legislation in a number of States.

(b) Plans for closer coordination of the property owners' divisions of member real estate boards with the national property owners' division organized by the association more than a year ago. Plans were discussed to further draw upon real estate owners to aid real estate boards in the present tax struggle.

A first step was taken to provide machinery through which the association may include in its membership competent and responsible persons in the business of real estate who are located in cities and towns in which there is no existing real estate board.

The directors authorized to be prepared for submission to the delegate body of the association at its coming Cincinnati convention such amendments to the constitution and by-laws as may be necessary to provide for affiliation of individuals from unorganized territory through membership in State associations. Under the present constitution the only membership possible in the association is through membership in one of its member boards.

The Albany Realty Board, Albany, Oreg., and the Gainesville Real Estate Board, Gainesville, Fla., were reinstated to membership in the association.

The Portland Realty Board, Portland, Oreg., at its request, was granted jurisdiction over Multnomah and Clackamas Counties.

The Winston-Salem Real Estate Board, N. C., which three times in the last twelve years has won the trophy offered for the best attendance at annual conventions of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, was permanently awarded the attendance cup by action of the national association's board of directors. The action was taken at the suggestion of the Cleveland Real Estate Board, donor of the trophy.

The cup was won at the 1931 convention by the Monroe County Real Estate Board, East Stroudsburg, Pa.

Contests on attendance are based on number of miles traveled to the convention and on number present in proportion to total board membership.

VIEW OF MOTHERS ON HOMES LAUDED

Their Judgment on Costs, Arrangement and Location Is Praised.

Chicago, Ill., May 7.—You can't go wrong buying the kind of a home your mother would want, the United States Building and Loan League suggests today in a message commemorating the nationally observed Mother's Day. Architecture and curtains and rugs may have changed since 1910, but mother's a, b, c's of home owning, i. e. the features that make a home livable, still hold, says the home building and home owning committee of the league which has gone back into past records to find mother's hand in choosing as well as shaping the home.

Six million twentieth century mothers have realized their heart's desire for a home through the financing aid of building and loan associations, the committee says. Looking at the homes these 6,000,000 chose the committee finds three common denominators of maternal home desires.

"In the first place, mother is not bent upon having a palace so much as upon owning a home with space enough for the youngsters at all times, without their being shoved into a dining room closet or a dark 2 by 4 apartment back porch with their toys," says the committee chairman. "In other words the house, as mother picks it out, is designed for the family to breathe freer and more happily than any place else, and that rule is to hold true from dad on down to the 2-year-olds.

"Secondly, you will find few mothers willing to buy a home that costs more than two or two and one-half times the family's annual income. This is the second bit of wisdom which the younger family today would do well to take out of mother's book. With the future welfare of her family as much on her mind as their present enjoyment, she weighs the budget carefully, and insists that they shall keep within cost limits which will permit them a reasonable certainty of paying off the mortgage in eight or ten years. Then she gets to work and makes the best home possible out of the dollars they have decided to put into it. Building and loan secretaries who have observed carefully from year to year the homes on which they lend have found the ingenuities of mothers in many instances worth keeping on record for the benefit of future borrowers. It has been found that mothers can teach designers and architects something about the little details which make a home livable.

"Thirdly, mothers always insist that the home must be something more than a dormitory and a breakfast nook for the people who live there. The home mother would want would invariably have some place to extend old-fashioned fireside hospitality to the friends of the generation growing up. With such a home as early in life as possible, the growing-ups will not be eager to move to a newer section of town, because their attachment for the home will be stronger than a fashionable whim. Records of building and loan associations show a remarkably small per cent of transfer of home property while it is still mortgaged to the association. It is a safe bet that when the home is sold for any other reason than necessary moving to another city, the house was not exactly according to mother's ideas in the first place.

"There has never been a time like the present in which it was so easy to buy a house which exactly fits mother's a, b, c's for the home. Small homes are available in any city today at prices which fit well into the formula of 'two to two and a half times the year's income.' They are homes which will serve the children's need for space to play in and the subdeb's need for a place to have her friends in.

"Mother's influence toward home ownership should be one of the chief grounds on which the Nation honors her today. Hundreds and hundreds of cases show her saving here and there in her household expenditures, putting the money aside each month to accumulate dividends in a building and loan association until there was enough there for a sizable down payment on the home."

"Clause 6—It is understood and agreed by all parties hereto that the within described property is to be sold at public auction as herein provided and that the highest price obtainable on sale day will be confirmed by the owner, regardless of what that price may be."
For twelve years this clause has been in every contract we have signed to sell property at auction.
The auction method of selling is the oldest and one of the most equitable known. But it is fair only when the owner does not set in advance a certain price that his property must bring. And when an owner sells under our contract, he shows his confidence in the worth of his own property; he shows he believes it will sell on its merits, and he is willing to trust the public to determine its value. Such an owner plays fair and the public will play fair with him.

NEW BANK OFFICES TO OPEN TOMORROW

Public Is Invited to Visit American Security & Trust Quarters.

The people of Washington are being invited by the American Security & Trust Co. to attend the opening tomorrow of its main office banking department in the completed bank building, located on the northwest corner of Fifteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest.

The original structure, which for more than a quarter of a century has housed the main office departments, has been completely remodeled and connected with the adjoining new American Security Building.

Modern equipment has been installed throughout the building to provide adequate banking and trust facilities. In the main banking room, to the left of the Fifteenth street entrance, is located the ladies' department. Here special desks, large comfortable chairs, and rest rooms have been provided for the convenience of the women customers.

To the right of the entrance will be found the executive quarters, and on the opposite side of the room have been installed the tellers' windows for paying, receiving, notes and collections.

Skylight Removed.

The skylight of the old building has been removed, and in its place there now appears the brightly colored pompeian ceiling. Near the top of the richly paneled walls is a border on which may be seen the following inscription: "Finance nurtures the soil and the mill, it supports commerce, which serves the world by land, sea and air. It is built upon confidence in integrity. It consolidates socities of cities of states and of the nations."

In addition to this remodeled building, the main office of the company now occupies several floors of the new American Security Building. The first floor is united with the main banking room, making one large and continuous lobby. On this floor are the foreign exchange, securities and real estate departments.

The safe deposit department has been established on the downstairs floor where it is easily accessible from the main banking room by both elevators and stairs. More than 30 coupon rooms have been provided for the convenience and privacy of customers of this department.

Here have been installed the massive two-story vaults of concrete and steel with 18-inch steel doors representing the latest development in scientific research. These vaults offer the utmost in safety and protection as they rank among the strongest in the country.

Other Departments.

The trust department occupies the entire second floor of this building. Spacious sections have been arranged and equipped for conference rooms, officers' desks and the accounting division of this department.

On the third floor are located the department of public relations, the personnel department, the purchasing department, bookkeeping department and the mail and addressograph rooms. The auditing department and the library are on the fourth floor.

The complete and up-to-date banking equipment that has been installed under the supervision of the firm's architects and engineers facilitates the conduct of business between departments, as well as between each department and customers. The pneumatic tube system for the conveyance of papers is an example of such features. The temperature control machinery of this building also means comfort for customers while transacting their business.

The American Security & Trust Co. was organized in 1889, and since that time has enjoyed an enviable record of growth. Today the company conducts five banking offices located in five sections of the city.

ENGINEERS TO PUSH PUBLIC WORKS PLAN

Appoint Committees to Aid President's Group in Creating Jobs.

Committees of the American Engineering Council in 26 States and the District of Columbia are cooperating with the public works section of the President's Organization on Unemployment Relief in a survey of 1932 public works projects. The American Institute of Architects and the Associated General Contractors of America also are participating.

"This work has three important phases," said the announcement by L. W. Wallace, executive secretary of the Engineering Council. "The first is the collection and dissemination of the information relative to all planned public and semipublic projects for 1932; the second is to check up on the progress being made; the third, and most important, is the stimulation and promotion of such of these planned projects as are delayed or postponed for any reason."

State committees on engineers and employment, with the following chairmen, are directing the activity in behalf of the engineering council:

Arizona, Dean G. M. Butler, University of Arizona, Tucson; Arkansas, C. E. Rose, vice president, Arkansas Cold Storage Co., Little Rock; California, F. R. George, Pacific Gas & Electric Co., San Francisco, and H. W. Hitchcock, chief engineer, Southern California Telephone Co., Los Angeles; Connecticut, Henry Robinson Buck, consulting engineer, Hartford; District of Columbia, R. W. Prince, chief engineer, Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., Washington, D. C.; Florida, Prof. Melvin Price, University of Florida, Gainesville; Illinois, R. F. Schuchardt, chief electrical engineer of the Commonwealth Edison Co., Chicago.

Prof. Knapp on Committee.

Indiana, Prof. W. A. Knapp, Purdue University; Louisiana, Carl Schneider, division of public works, City Hall, New Orleans; Maine, Dean Paul Cloke, University of Maine; Massachusetts, Col. F. M. Gunby, 201 Devonshire street, and A. W. Dean, chief engineer, department of public works, Boston; Michigan, J. P. Hallihan, chief engineer, Rapid Transit Commission, Detroit; Nevada, J. D. Scrugham, Nevada State Journal, Reno; New Hampshire, Dean George W. Case, College of Technology, University of New Hampshire; Minnesota, Col. Paul Doty, chairman of the board, State board of Registration, St. Paul; New Mexico, Dean James T. Rood, division of engineering, College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, State College; New York, H. de B. Parsons, consulting engineer and professor emeritus of Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute.

North Carolina, C. A. Mees, president, Mees & Mees, Inc., Charlotte; North Dakota, J. D. McKinnon, State high commissioner, Bismarck; Ohio, George T. Trundle, jr., president, Trundle Engineering Co., Cleveland; Oregon, D. C. Henny, consulting engineer, Portland; South Dakota, Dean H. M. Crothers, South Dakota State College; Texas, E. W. Robinson, vice president and treasurer, McKenzie Construction Co., San Antonio; Vermont, George A. Reed, commissioner of public works, Montpelier; Virginia, Dean E. B. Norris, Virginia Polytechnic Institute; Washington, Joseph Jacobs, consulting engineer, Seattle; Wyoming, Joseph A. Elliott, Wyoming Development Co., Wheatland.

Federal Construction Disappointing.

"There has been a great deal of disappointment because Federal construction has not relieved unemployment to the degree anticipated," the Engineering Council's announcement declared. "This situation has been thoroughly studied by the American Engineering Council, and it is convinced that public works can never be made as effective a factor as they might be in relieving unempoyment until there is established an administration of public works or its equivalent.

"The work is now so scattered, and there is such divided responsibility, that there is no means of adequately regimenting public works to make it immediately effective in times of emergency. Under a central authority public works can be made a potent influence in relieving unemployment.

"The American Engineering Council, which represents 60,000 professional engineers, in common with virtually all the engineering and allied technical societies of the United States, strongly urges the grouping of the architectural, engineering, and construction functions of the Federal Government into one establishment.

"The important thing is to bring these functions under a central authority. It is not of paramount importance whether the grouping shall be placed in an existing department, as the Department of the Interior, or in an independent establishment, as an administration of public works. However, in view of the conception expressed herein it would seem that an independent establishment would be preferable."

This is the corner house in an attractive brick row. There is a center hall, a large living room and open porch, a cheery dining room with sunroom beyond, and a light and airy kitchen in restful cream and green. Upstairs are four bedrooms and two tile baths with showers. In the basement is a pleasant recreation room, laundry and built-in garage.

As you go through this house (and everyone interested in a modern home should go through it) there will be a score of features you'll want to jot down and remember—the careful plan which makes possible so many large rooms on a moderate-sized foundation—the beautiful kitchen with its abundance of cupboards, its color, its quiet gas refrigerator and time-saving modern gas range—the novel night light in the bedroom wall—the hardwood trim in unusual finish—the roomy laundry with its automatic gas water heater—the completely automatic Ideal gas heating system—and the cooling device, exclusive with Wire Company homes, which takes the cooler air of the basement recreation room and distributes it at 500 cubic feet a minute to the bedrooms upstairs.

These are the things which make a house modern. See them here, in actual use, and see how much they can add to the comfort, freedom and convenience of living.

ROUND-UP OF SHORTS REDUCES INTERESTS

Total of 3,279,398 Shares in April Cut by May to 2,758,161.

By FRANK H. M'CONNELL.

New York, May 7 (A.P.).—The greatest round-up of the stock market's bears since the New York Stock Exchange began its present daily statistics on short selling was shown today to have occurred during April.

On May 2, the short interests totaled 2,758,161 shares. This was 521,237 shares less than the 3,279,398 figure reported on April 1. The rout came at a time when stock prices were steadily going lower. This contrast—declining stock prices at a time when shorts were most actively buying stocks—was seized upon by some champions of short selling, as indicating that it has not been a seriously depressing factor.

The monthly report, computed on a day-to-day basis, shed interesting light on how the short sellers reacted to congressional investigation of the stock market and to other Washington developments.

Stock Tax Effects.

On April 1 when the House passed a tax bill calling for a heavy increase in taxes on stock transactions, the short interest stood at 3,279,398 shares. By April 6 it had declined to 3,063,927 shares.

On April 7, when the Senate investigations committee announced its plans to investigate short selling, there was a skirmish on the part of shorts to cover. This was reflected in a sharp decrease in the total short interest which fell off nearly 200,000 shares in a single market session.

By April 11, when the investigation was actually started, the short interest had declined to 2,469,067 shares—off 493,840 shares from the April 6 figure of 3,063,927 shares—and the movement continued until a low point of 2,323,738 shares was reached on April 15.

The trend gradually reversed itself and after the bears had become accustomed to the prospect of a senatorial study, they lost some of their timidity. On April 20, when the Senate summoned a group of brokers to testify on short selling, the short interest increased 70,000 shares to a total of 2,450,863 shares. The next day when the names of 350 shorts were published, the total short interest showed another wild gain to 2,510,209 shares. Since then, the variations have continued on a small but unusually ascending scale until the latest available figure of 2,758,161 shares was recorded as of May 2.

Decrease of Shorts.

A decrease of 521,237 shares in total short interest during April marked the greatest change to be made in those figures for any one month this year except for January. In January the change was in the other direction. Short sales increased from a total figure of 2,962,127 reported on the first trading day of the new year, to 3,600,265 shares on February 1.

For the year to date, the highest point reached by the short interest was 3,965,142 shares on February 10, while the lowest point was the 2,323,738 figure reported on April 15.

During April, while the shorts were buying stocks to cover their commitments, the stock market suffered its most severe decline since last December. The total value of all listed stocks in April declined $4,182,000,000 to a new low figure of $20,319,000,000. The December decline amounted to $4,412,000,000 carrying the market valuation figure down from $31,105,000,000 on December 1 to $26,693,000,000 at the start of January.

Brokers to Report On Puts and Calls

Exchange Request Seen as Move in Inquiry by Senate.

New York, May 7 (A.P.).—Members of the New York Stock Exchange were requested today by the business conduct committee to furnish a list of all "puts and calls" issued or indorsed by the members.

A list is to be submitted daily until further notice.

While the exchange did not disclose its purpose in seeking this information, it was suggested in brokerage circles that it was merely a move to be prepared to meet any line of inquiry that may be followed when the Senate banking and currency committee resumes it hearings on the stock exchange.

"Puts and calls" represent contract options on the buying and selling side of stocks. The interest of brokers in these options is largely as an indorser of the contracts made by customers.

The "put and call" business formerly was an active adjunct of trading on the stock exchange, but in recent years it has fallen off sharply.

Germany Reduces Tariff on Wheat

Action Taken to Cover Shortage; 30 Per Cent Quota Effective.

Berlin, May 7 (A.P.).—To cover the country's wheat shortage, the duty on foreign wheat has been reduced from 250 marks to 180 marks a ton until June 20 for 15 flour mills out of the 100 which are permitted to grind imported wheat.

The duty was reduced to 180 marks a ton for a quantity of wheat equal to 15 per cent of all the wheat milled from April to June, 1930, by flour mills which used foreign wheat during that time. American officials here estimated that the amount involved would be about 100,000 tons.

The decree confirms the present milling quota of 97 per cent domestic wheat, but permits reduction of the quota to 70 per cent in the case of foreign wheat imported under the new provisions. Great importance is attached to the decree, for it puts an end to the element of uncertainty existing in the German milling situation.

A milling quota section permitting up to 30 per cent foreign wheat will be effective until August 15.

The board of managers of the New York Cotton Exchange has denied a petition for a vote of members on making Saturday, May 28, the Saturday preceding Memorial Day, an exchange holiday.

SALES ON STOCK EXCHANGE

Total sales, 639,949 shares; previous day, 1,628,700 shares; week ago, 439,480 shares; year ago, 1,157,350 shares; two years ago, 1,880,450 shares; January 1 to date, 136,788,861 shares; year ago, 241,212,503 shares; two years ago, 376,295,889 shares.

Undertone Remains Strong; Bonds Hold Firm as Curb Takes Losses.

By JOHN L. COOLEY.

New York, May 7 (A.P.).—Although the rally in stocks was halted by week-end profit taking today, the existence of a generally firm undertone suggested some encouragement given by budget news from Washington was still a constructive market factor.

There was a little selling in the first half hour and again at the close. Early losses were quickly recovered, but when leaders pushed above Friday's final prices, further realizing sales appeared, especially in industrials and utilities, and small net losses were the rule. Rails, however, held up well.

Sales totaled 659,949 shares.

The late sag may have been influenced in part by concern lest the House ways and means committee reverse yesterday's unfavorable report on bonus legislation, for the market closed before it was learned that the previous decision was to stand. However, technical influences seemed to be dominant.

Major fractional declines for American Telephone, U. S. Steel, General Electric, Case and Woolworth were slightly exceeded by a few stocks, including American Can and Allied Chemical. On the other hand, Santa Fe, Southern Pacific, Delaware & Hudson, Norfolk & Western and Chesapeake & Ohio closed firmly. New York Central and Union Pacific lost about half a point. Standard of New Jersey and Pan-American Petroleum "B" maintained the good record being made by oils.

Washington News Discussed.

Expressions of opinion on recent Washington developments constituted most of the conversation in commission house circles. Commentators pointed out that several uncertainties were still to be confronted and that the Senate committee's budget bill had yet to face the membership and conference with the lower House. Nevertheless, prospects of prompt action were believed to be much brighter.

Some other steel producers followed the leadership of the United States Steel Corporation in cutting wages and salaries. One question brought up by these deductions is whether fresh pressure will now be brought to bear on prices or whether renewed price cutting will make its appearance, but it was reported that manufacturers were determined to maintain present quotation schedules on finished materials.

Steel operations at the beginning of next week, according to advance estimates, will be unchanged on the average, although there is considerable irregularity as among the various districts. Demand from automobile sources seems to be holding steady.

The coming week will bring comparatively few important dividend meetings. Among them, however, are those of Union Pacific, Eastman Kodak and Atlantic Refining. Union Pacific's directors surprised Wall street three months ago by declaring a regular quarterly payment, but gossip now has it that the annual $10 basis may be halved.

Bonds Exhibit Strength.

The bond market again gave a quiet exhibition of strength today despite a wave of profit taking near the close of the session which washed out substantial gains in a number of issues.

The averages of the principal listed loans, however, held their gains of yesterday. Trading was comparatively quiet in the corporate groups, sales totaling $5,650,000, par value.

United States Government obligations repeated their ascending performance of Friday, although they did not close at the top quotations of the day. Most of the Treasury's recorded net gains of around one-half point, while the Liberties were moderately higher.

Low-priced railroads continued in favor. Advances of from 1 to 5 points were recorded by some liens of Atchison, Batimore & Ohio, Canadian Pacific, Chicago & Alton, Denver & Rio Grande, International Great Northern, Missouri Pacific, New York Central, Nickel Plate, Northern Pacific, Pennsylvania, Southern Pacific, Union Pacific and Wabash.

Oils and communications company loans were conspicuous among the industrials and utilities. Strength was shown by bonds of American Telephone, Western Union, Columbia Gas, Dodge Bros., Goodrich, Humble Oil, Mercantile Marine, Metropolitan Edison, Morris & Co., Phillips Petroleum, Shell Union Oil, Sinclair Oil and Utah Power & Light. Bethlehem Steel refunding 5s gained 6 points following the company's wage reduction announcement.

The foreign section was comparatively steady. French bonds eased only slightly following President Doumer's death.

Curb Joins Losses.

The curb market lost some of its vitality with the result that, in comparatively quiet trading, stocks ended the short session with minor minus signs predominating.

The irregularly lower trend was generally attributed to profit taking. The turnover approximated 90,000 shares.

Some oils and a few utilities continued to exhibit quiet strength, but most of them failed to hold their high prices of the day. Standard of Indiana was the most active of the petroleum group, finishing with a net gain of ¼ point. Fractional advances were also recorded by Standard of Kentucky and Humble. Gulf gave up ⅞ point.

Electric Bond & Share made a gallant attempt to hold its own, but finally succumbed for a loss of 1½ points.

The industrials were mixed. Swift International closed at its high for the session with a gain of ⅜, while Swift & Co. added ¼ point to its previous quotation.

Ford of Canada "A" and Ford Motor Ltd. both advanced moderately.

Atlantic Gulf.

The New York Stock Exchange has received notice from the Atlantic Gulf & West Indies Steamship Lines of a proposed reduction in the authorized preferred stock from $10,800,000 to $10,000,000.

WALL STREET—AND BEYOND

Markets and Business in Review and Outlook

By LAWRENCE SULLIVAN.

THERE is an old saying on Capitol Hill that a member of the honorable House of Representatives always may be distinguished by the dandruff on the collar of his coat.

That, of course, does not explain completely why business throughout the United States has been frozen since last December on a dead-center of uncertainty and fear. But it does offer a fairly accurate forecast of what the immediate future holds.

Soon or late, to be sure, an angry and insistent national sentiment will force the Democratic leaders of the House to an earnest and sincere acceptance of their enormous constitutional responsibilities. Then, some time before the end of the session, the honorable Congress, acting in what probably will pass for the moment as its wisdom, will provide some sort of legislation seriously calculated to balance the national budget.

Lashed to faithful endeavor at last by America's recently developed intuition of political realism, the honorable members will raise new revenues and curtail old expenditures, precisely as public opinion has demanded so vigorously since the present session began.

They will stand up courageously and tell the organized veteran racketeers to pull their figurative bellies out of the national trough.

They will face the shocking realities of our long-standing paralysis of bureaucracy, and clothe the President with authority to revitalize the Federal establishment.

They will, in short, abandon the roll of depressive maniacs and get to work.

That much already is in the political stars.

* * * *

BUT when all these vital achievements have been wrung from the reluctant majority in the House; when Mr. Garner has broken his last gavel and Mr. La Guardia, his last political tambourine; when the national spirit has been flogged so unmercifully with the heavy rod of organized incompetence that nobody cares longer whether times be good or bad; when the last great labors of the nonpartisan emergency program for economic rehabilitation are sent to the White House for the President's signature and the steaming locomotives are waiting in Union Station to carry the boys to the second Madison Square Garden convention at Chicago; when, as we say, all of these great events have come to pass and all that should have been accomplished in January and February finally is offered for the inspection of the prostrated Nation in June or July, there still will linger in every paragraph and every comma of the essential legislation that pathetic symbol of personal frustration and childish irresponsibility. Permeating all the frenzied and belated effort to restore confidence and prosperity will be found, unmistakably, the poignant dust of spiritual and intellectual dandruff.

* * * *

"I REFUSE to believe that the country is unable to reflect its will in legislation," President Hoover said to the House on Thursday of last week.

But the world of business has recognized since the mid-March tax debacle in the House of Representatives that the robust and progressive will of a mighty and always forward-looking nation of millions of honest, hard-working, home-loving and God-fearing men and women can not be reflected through a cotton-eyed dandruff squad on Capitol Hill.

Today's chaos in commodity and security values is but the economic projection of the eggplant mental processes of the honorable House of Representatives since last December 7.

America is eager to resume the march of progress. She has been tugging impatiently at her political shackles for months.

But business confidence can not improve until the leaders of the House of Representatives make some positive move to restore to the people of the United States their old faith in their cherished system of self-government.

RUSSIAN OIL PARLEY SEEKS MARKET AIDS

Socony - Vacuum President Says Aim Is to Regulate Price Demoralization.

New York, May 7 (A.P.).—C. E. Arnott, president of the Socony-Vacuum Corporation, today announced that forthcoming conferences with Russian oil representatives would be for the purpose of ending demoralization in foreign oil markets.

"For some years past," he said, "Socony-Vacuum Corporation, operating in foreign markets, has made purchases from time to time of Russian oil products. The Russians have additional supplies available for export, with the result that a considerable duplication of disturbing facilities has taken place, resulting in a general demoralization of the foreign markets outside of the United States, and a meeting will be held for the purpose of determining whether or not some understanding may be reached with a view to correcting this general demoralization."

Mr. Arnott emphasized that the conference would confine its discussion to the economic distribution of petroleum products produced in Russia and distributed in markets outside of the United States and its possessions. He made it clear that the conferences would in no way have any connection with production, prices or imports into the United States.

The statement is the first that Mr. Arnott has made with regard to the discussions that have aroused keen interest in oil circles throughout the world.

The Soviet delegation is headed by Philip Rabinovich, member of the Russian commissariat of foreign trade, who formerly worked in a Chicago metal shop, but left this company to enlist in the red army during the Russian revolution, K. Riabovolzer and R. N. Fridman, other leading figures in the Russian oil combine, are also members of the delegation.

Other prominent oil men who are expected to arrive here next week for the world oil "peace conference" are J. B. August Kessler, representing the Royal Dutch interests; William Fraser, of Anglo-Persian Oil, and Robert I. Watson, of the Burman Oil Co.

Dollar Values Easier In Foreign Exchanges

New York, May 7 (A.P.).—Dollars were somewhat easy against leading foreign exchanges today. Most European currencies returned small gains which maintained, the gold moneys above rates at which further shipments of metal would be profitable.

French francs improved slightly, together with the belga and the Swiss franc, but Dutch guilders were off a point.

Sterling closed ⅜ cent higher at $3.67½.

American Radiator.

The American Radiator Standard Sanitary Corporation has omitted the dividend on the common stock due at this time, the company announced today. A payment of 10 cents a share was made three months ago.

APRIL STEEL YIELD LOWEST IN 10 YEARS

Production Is 22.52 Per Cent of Capacity; Moderate Gain Shown in May.

New York, May 7 (A.P.).—Although the trend of steel production was slightly higher for the first week in May, as a result of moderately improved buying of automobile sheets, official figures for April just released showed average production at 22.52 per cent of capacity, the lowest since July, 1921.

Production schedules vary considerably with districts, reflecting the effect of miscellaneous orders. Buying by railroads is restricted. Announcement of a 15 per cent wage cut by large steel corporations may lead buyers to seek lower prices for products, it is said.

Pig iron production in April declined 8.9 per cent from the March average.

Demand continued limited at unchanged prices.

Copper remained dull although an easier undertone developed as metal became available through a custom smelter source at 5 5-8c, while others adhered to a nominal quotation of 5¾c for electrolytic delivered in the Connecticut valley. Moderate foreign buying tapered off, when London and the domestic price eased without a corresponding decline in the export quotation. Home consumers remained indifferent.

Tin advanced sharply when cabled reports were received indicating that the international tin committee proposed to reduce member production to a basis of 40 per cent with additional drastic summer curtailment. The release price of surplus holdings would be advanced to £200. Slight reactions from the highest occurred after moderately improved demand tapered off.

Moderate buying of lead continued at steady prices, although demand fell off toward the close. With sellers well booked, there was no pressure to sell.

Zinc eased further as consumers restricted interest to carload lots. April statistics revealed that despite decreased production, stocks increased as a result of smaller shipments.

Antimony remained dull, with the price nominally lower under further easting of Chinese offerings.

A moderate quickening of demand for low-priced cars has resulted in a few upward revisions in production schedules, but both production and sales are likely to remain substantially below those of a year earlier, says the Standard Statistics Co.

Canada's Gold Output Sets New High Record

Ottawa, Ontario, May 7 (A.P.).—Gold production in Canada during March set up a new high record.

Canadian producers reported an output of 255,675 ounces during the month, an advance of 13.2 per cent above the February total of 225,891 ounces and 25.3 per cent above the March 1931 production of 240,038 ounces.

National Air Transport.

National Air Transport Co., Inc., reports for the quarter ended March 31 net loss of $6,750 after expenses and taxes, compared with net profit of $117,579, equal to 18 cents a share in the first quarter of 1931.

HOOVER'S TAX STAND ENCOURAGES STOCKS

Cracking Whip Over Congress Inspires Price Rises; Strength Persists.

By CLAUDE A. JAGGER.

New York, May 7 (A.P.).—The stock market, seemingly almost wholly under the dominion of Washington developments this week, took fresh courage when President Hoover cracked the whip over Congress in an effort to speed the vexatious taxation and economy measures.

Liquidation had already showed signs of drying up, and the administration's militant stand evidently found the market's technical position ripe for a rally. At any rate, the list experienced its sharpest upturn since mid-February on Friday, and held up well under profit taking and hangover liquidation at the close of the week.

Uncertainties as to what interests, industries, or businesses are to be called upon to bridge the huge Federal deficit through new taxation have been one of the more disturbing influences during the past several weeks, in the opinion of leading bankers. The latest slump in the market, starting in mid-March, has coincided fairly generally with the taxation snarl.

Latest Market Phase.

The latest phase of liquidation, however, has appeared to be definitely on the wane for the past several days. Nevertheless, prices drifted to new lows during the early days of the week. Selling was in meager volume, but bulls were timid.

Before the turn came, price averages drifted to new low levels for the 2½-year slump. Industrials, as measured by one leading price average, sagged to the lowest since 1921, while another widely quoted average reached a level only a shade above the low of 1914, which, in turn, was the lowest since 1907.

The rails penetrated levels for which there is no parallel in modern times. For some time these equities have been at the lowest levels since the 1890's, and one statistical record indicated the lowest level for leading carrier shares since the turbulent 1870's.

The Friday recovery in the stock market was helped along by U. S. Steel's announcement of a 15 per cent wage cut, but the rally was well under way before this news appeared. The economies which the big corporation effects by the wage reduction, it was unofficially estimated in Wall street, should be sufficient to cover preferred dividends, but may not pull the corporaiton out of the red unless business improves.

Goldsborough Bill Effect.

Passage by the House of the Goldsborough bill directing the Federal Reserve system to endeavor to restore commodity prices to about the level of 1926 was apparently misinterpreted in some quarters abroad, where there has been a disposition to believe that the United States is ready to take the plunge into monetary inflation. At any rate, this factor, together with seeming inability of Congress to balance the budget, brought heavy selling of the dollar in foreign exchange markets, and a fresh outflow of gold from New York.

The outflow of metal was viewed calmly, inasmuch as the supply of the free gold has been greatly increased by the Glass-Steagall act, and is now approximately $1,300,000,000, or far in excess of estimated short-term foreign balances here.

It was notable that there was no active foreign dumping of American securities, which was interpreted by international bankers as indicating that confidence in the United States had not been severely damaged.

The Standard Statistics Co. price index of 90 leading shares rallied 2.3 points on Friday, reaching 48.4. This was the sharpest gain since mid-February, when the Glass-Steagall measure, strengthening the country's banking position, was accompanied by a 10-point gain in two sessions. The price index ended the week at 47.7, up 1.4 from a week previously.

The price index of 60 corporate bonds ended the week at 64.7, or 1.2 below the level of the previous Saturday.

ANNIVERSARY NEAR FOR ANACOSTIA BANK

Institution Will Celebrate 22d Birthday of Founding on Tuesday.

By THOMAS M. CAHILL.

The Anacostia Bank will celebrate its twenty-second anniversary Tuesday, the bank opening as an independent institution May 10, 1910, with the late George O. Walson, president; Dr. M. M. Moffatt, vice president and Maurice Otterback, present president of the bank, cashier.

The bank is unique in that it had its inception in a drug store. In the summer of 1905, Mr. Walson, then treasurer of the former Union Savings Bank, conceived the idea of stationing himself of evenings in the drug store of George B. Bury at Nichols avenue and W street in Anacostia, for the purpose of collecting deposits for his institution.

His plan met with success and in the following year, a building was erected to serve as the Anacostia branch of Union Savings Bank. It was formally opened in September, 1906, under the management of Mr. Otterback, who had been a note teller at the National Capital Bank of Washington.

Continuance of the branch's early success led those interested in it to obtain, May 5, 1910, a West Virginia charter for "The People's Home Bank of Anacostia." Immediately after, these interests entered into negotiations with Union Savings Bank and purchased the subsidiary interest and the building housing the branch, changing the title of the bank to its present one.

The bank first opened for business at 2021 Nichols avenue and in July, 1925, moved into its own building at 2000 Nichols avenue. On December 2, 1912, the bank paid its first dividend at the rate of 8 per cent per annum. The rate was increased in 1921 to 10 per cent and in 1923 to 12 per cent. The initial capitalization was $25,000 and deposits at close of the first day's business were $23,504. In December, 1920, the capital stock was doubled. Its deposits have risen to more than $1,494,000.

The bank's affairs were first directed by an executive committee headed by Dr. R. A. Pyles and including the officers and Adolphus Gude, George S. King, J. J. Clennon and J. Frank Campbell. These afterward became the directorate. Mr. Walson retired as president in 1916, afterward becoming president of Liberty National Bank and the Washington Stock Exchange. He was succeeded by Mr. Gude, who resigned in 1918, being succeeded by Mr. Otterback.

C. F. Childs & Co., dealers in Government securities, announce that J. Richard Garvin, formerly of their New York and Philadelphia offices, is now associated with their Washington office.

The price of prime Western zinc was lowered today to 2.55 cents a pound, East St. Louis, a new low, and comparing with 2.55@2.60 cents last week. Sales of tristate zinc concentrates last week totaled 2,940 tons, with the price at $16 short ton, a decrease of $1 from the previous week and a new low. Production for the week was 3,400 tons and shipments, 3,900, making stocks of sold and unsold concentrates in the tristate field 87,800 tons.

T. R. Dahl and George H. Kelly were today elected directors of the White Motor Co., increasing the board from eleven to thirteen members. Both the new directors have been with the company for a number of years.

(Associated Press.)

New York, May 7 (A.P.).—It is believed in Wall Street that other steel companies will lose no time in following the lead of the U. S. Steel Corporation in reducing wages and salaries. Bethlehem Steel Corporation has already announced that a similar adjustment will be made.

Morgan, Turnure & Co., who as nominee for the real owners, are down as the largest individual holders of several leading stocks, as so scheduled on the Pennsylvania Railroad stockholders list. As nominee for a fixed trust they are credited with a holding of 53,185 shares as of December 31, last.

A total of $25,282,661 in new bond offerings by 38 municipalities is scheduled for next week, according to the Daily Bond Buyer. In the week just ended municipal offerings totaled $24,292,428.

It is expected that steel mill operations in the Youngstown district will be raised next week to 28 per cent of capacity compared with an average of 26 per cent for the week just ended.

The regular weekly statement of the New York Clearing House shows clearings for the week ended May 7 aggregated $3,868,426, against $2,829,411,760 for the week ended April 30.

Stuart W. Webb, who has been acting as head of Pathe Exchange, Inc., for the past year since the resignation of E. D. Derr, has been elected president, it was announced today. His title heretofore has been executive vice president.

The value of heavy engineering contracts awarded throughout the United States in the first week of May totaled $22,658,000, or more than $1,000,000 under the weekly average valuation in April, according to the Engineering News-Record. The average weekly total in May of last year was $54,458,000.

Production of lumber continues to run at about one-half the volume of a year ago, according to the Lumber Manufacturers Association. For the week ended April 30 the cut totaled 121,565,000 feet, with orders exceeding it by 11 per cent and shipments by 24 per cent.

There are several factors in the meat packing situation which hold out promise of more profitable operations for the industry this year, according to packing interests. They include the slight increase in tonnage volume of consumption over the high level of a year ago, lower inventories, especially of packed pork, and sharply reduced operating and overhead costs.

Manufactured gas sales are dependent largely on domestic trend, and therefore have been and are likely to continue relatively stable, says the Standard Statistics Co. In natural gas consumption trend continues unfavorably affected by its close relation to industrial activity.

Silver futures on the National Metal Exchange, Inc., closed the week at slight gains and substantially above the low levels of the period. New York spot silver recovered ⅜ cent an ounce from the week's low level of 27 cents. Gossip in brokerage circles is that China may be expected to purchase additional silver here and in London to pay for reconstruction in Shanghai.

The American Founders Corporation announces today that it was prepared to purchase for retirement not less than one-fourth nor more than one-third of the total number of shares of its cumulative first preferred stock outstanding, irrespective of series, at a flat price of $22.50 a share.

Robert A. Lovett has been elected a director of American Airways, Inc., transport subsidiary of the Aviation Corporation of Delaware, to fill a vacancy.

Legal opinion transmitted to the New York Stock Exchange committee on securities is that it is not possible for the present at least to have certificates of Prairie Oil & Gas and Prairie Pipe Line split up into certificates of smaller denominations. The exchange is seeking to find a way for adjusting the differences between holders of the Prairie stocks who did not deposit their shares in the merger of Consolidated Oil Corporation and the management of the latter company.

McGraw-Hill Publishing Co. and subsidiaries report for the quarter ended March 31 net loss of $100,427 after taxes and charges, compared with net profit of $373,022, equal to 62 cents a share in the first quarter of 1931.

COLLATERAL LOANS DROP TO NEW LOW

Speculative Stock Business Being Financed Now on Brokers' Money.

New York, May 7 (A.P.).—Market commentators have said many times in the last year or so that the stock market is practically on a cash basis, meaning that brokers were borrowing very little to carry their customers' margin accounts.

This statement appears to be amply borne out by the ratio of stock exchange member borrowings against collateral as of May 2.

With the ratio at 1.87 per cent, a new low, it is estimated by the market observers that most of the speculative business in stocks is being financed by the brokers with their own money.

Business Barometer

By LYNNE M. LAMM

There is a feeling among some of the industrial leaders of the country that the recovery of a normal volume of business at present price levels throughout industry as a whole, would not restore prosperity. On the contrary, they contend, it would simply increase the loss factor in the general credit equation. They say that this is more nearly true than is commonly recognized.

Eugene Meyer, governor of the Federal Reserve Board, says that "the fear of currency tinkering is today retarding the restoration of confidence in this country." His board indicates that reports received show that April failed to hold up to the usual seasonal advance in both industrial activity and employment.

Ford Large Buyer.

Ford Motor Co. has recently purchased some new equipment which is required in connection with the development of the new eight-cylinder car, the Navy Department has been making some purchases and there has been a limited demand for construction machinery for use in connection with some of the projects now going forward.

In connection with the better feeling which seems to exist, various machinery manufacturers believe that the depression has been dragging along the bottom long enough and that the upturn is not far away.

Quotations are out for a large number of projects which undoubtedly will be taken in hand just as soon as a reasonable measure of confidence has been restored, and since the banking and credit situation has been improved during recent weeks and certain commodity prices have advanced, there appears to be some justification for the equipment manufacturers' optimism.

Silverware Sales Better.

Spring sales of manufacturing jewelers are lower than they have been in any previous season for the past five years. Cheaper lines of pewterware, however, are moving better than they did last year.

Sales of some of the large silverware manufacturer's, on the other hand, are reported to be running ahead of last year, both in sterling and plate.

Retail jewelers price units are down as compared with last year this time and there has been a decided falling off in higher price sales. April sales were less than last year, it is reported, but prices were down so compared with last year that the retailers contend comparison is not fair.

The retailers are reporting a good silver sale increase and the trend, they say, is away from the plated to sterling silver in view of the tremendous price reduction which has been put into effect by silver manufacturers. Silverware is a large part of the retail trade and some merchants are claiming that the public is being educated now in the use of sterling silverware due to its reduced cost. They feel that this is a distinct forward step for them.

Several large clock orders have been placed recently which is making some of the clock manufacturers busier than usual. Incomes for last year among the big watch, clock and jewelry manufacturers, however, are considerable off from what they were the previous year.

The whole industry, manufacturer, wholesaler and retailer are upset over the proposed 10 per cent excise tax contained in the new revenue bill on jewelry sales which has already passed the House. They are claiming that their trade will be hurt and that they can not absorb the tax but that it must be passed on to the consumer.

Radio Sales Slow.

Sales of radio sets are holding up fairly well, but they are reported off somewhat from this time last year. This is partly accounted for by the fact that companies are not pushing sales at this time in view of the fact that the annual radio show will be held the latter part of May, at which time the new model will be shown. Retailers are expending their energies now in trying to clear their shelves of last year's models and cleaning up their old stock. The dollar value is down also from what it was last year, but this is due in part to the fact that the price of sets has been materially reduced.

The latest official retail figures available are those of the Bureau of the Census, which show that for the fourth quarter of last year retail sales, as reported by 6,570 radio retailers, totaled $12,553,336, as compared with $8,151,350 for the third quarter. Stocks on hand by these same retailers at the end of the fourth quarter were valued at $5,741,175, as compared with $7,036,974 at the end of the third quarter. This shows that from the third to the fourth quarter sales increased 54 per cent, while stocks on hand decreased 18 per cent.

Machinery Industries at Low Level.

Operations in the machinery industries are at an unusually low level. However, there is a very encouraging undertone in the market. Periods of low business activity are peculiarly severe on those who produce equipment. Machine tool orders are at the lowest point for a decade, and manufacturers of other types of equipment are also seriously affected. In the machine tool industry both employment and pay rolls are far off from last year. In February 145 machine tool plants reported their employment at 15,168, a decline of 1.1 per cent from January and of 35.2 per cent from Ferbuary of last year. Weekly pay rolls in these identical plants in February also totaled $336,861, a decline of 1.2 per cent from January and of 40.3 per cent from February of last year.

WHEAT PRICES DROP AS STOCKS DECLINE

Corn and Oats Join Slump; Russian Grain Buying May Become Factor.

Chicago, May 7 (A.P.).—Keeping in step with the stock market, grain traders reversed their position late today and saw Friday's price advances more than undone.

Final dips by securities wrecked bullish sentiment and wheat closed unsettled, ⅜ to ¾ cent under yesterday's finish. Corn was down ⅜ to ¾ cent, oats ¼ to ⅜ cent off, and provisions 2 cents to 7 cents up.

A transient advance in stock market quotations helped wheat to overcome an early dip that came after rain beneficial to the entire domestic grain belt. The temporary strength of securities was also more than sufficient to offset comparative weakness of the Liverpool wheat market, where yesterday's price advances on this side of the Atlantic met with little response.

Meanwhile, Russian operations in the world wheat market aroused much interest, and the fact that Russia was a buyer instead of a seller was looked upon generally as a potential element of strength. Bulls laid stress also on an estimate that world shipments of wheat would have to be about 17,000,000 bushels a week until the end of the crop year, and that this would necessitate liberal buying of North American wheat.

Nevertheless, owing to late downturns in securities, wheat prices slipped down again before the finish regardless of late news that the Russian government had decreed radical changes in its grain collection policy, changes which in some quarters here were construed as bullish.

Corn and oats tagged after wheat. Fairly heavy selling of corn was noted, and apparently Argentine was still effectively competing abroad against corn from the United States.

Provisions averaged higher, helped by support from packers.

COTTON PRICE GAINS SLIGHT AT CLOSING

July Contracts Unchanged at 5.84; Others Advance by One Point.

New York, May 7 (A.P.).—Demand tapered off following a further advance at the opening today and cotton reacted later in the morning under comparatively smaller offerings, with July selling down from 5.90 to 5.82 and closing at 5.84.

The general market closed steady, with prices net unchanged to 1 point higher.

The opening was steady at an advance of 6 to 9 points on a continuation of Friday's buying movement, which included some trade and commission house buying, as well as covering, promoted by the more favorable view of the Washington news. The advance to 5.79 for May and 6.16 for October, over approximately half a cent from the low levels of last Monday, seemed sufficient to attract considerable week-end realizing.

This supplied the early demand and the market later sagged lower under comparatively small offerings. May declined to 5.71 and October to 6.06, but closing prices were a shade up from the lowest on renewed covering.

Houses with continental connections were among the buyers here early, while there was a little selling believed to be for Far Eastern account.

Some Southern selling was also reported, but advices received here from Texas said there had been an improved demand for spot cotton at the ports late yesterday, with the basis generally firm.

The Liverpool market just about met the advance reported here yesterday afternoon. Private cables reported trade calling, cover and local buying supplied by realizing in that market.

Sales of fertilizer tag sales in the thirteen Southern States for the month of April were said to be 77 per cent of last year's, and for the four months January-April 60 per cent of last year.

A New York Cotton Exchange membership sold today at $10,000, a decrease of $1,000 from the previous sale.

THOUGHTS ON EARLY SUMMER IN AND ABOUT THE THEATERS

By NELSON B. BELL

THE hard times that have harassed the motion picture industry in every region of the outland these many months past, "placed the finger" of its disruptive power on the National Capital for the first time, a week ago, when the Fox Theater gave up the ghost and passed to the control of Loews, Inc., one of the few organizations in the industry that seem to have maintained a level-headed business equilibrium during the current period of stress.

The exit of the Fox interests from the National Capital marks merely a local manifestation of the gradual disintegration of the Fox Theaters Corporation that has been going on ever since the ill-judged expulsion of William Fox from the leadership of the enterprise he had nurtured from a modest nickelodeon to an industrial giant appraised at $25,000,000, or some such fabulous sum.

At the moment, there seems to be no substantial surviving entity that may accurately be designated the Fox Theaters Corporation. The New England houses of what was once an apparently flourishing and going concern are now under the personal operation of Harry Arthur, formerly general manager of all Fox Theaters in the East; another considerable group have passed to the control of the Skouras Brothers, erstwhile St. Louis magnates, more recently identified with the Warner Brothers interests; the de luxe Fox houses in Atlanta, Detroit and St. Louis, I am led to believe, are in the hands of the bankers and the Roxy, Broadway's and the world's largest and most magnificent cathedral of the cinema, has been taken over by the stockholders, who are operating the property under executive management of their own selection.

Thus has crumbled one of the most impressive commercial structures the unprecedented growth of the business of picture exhibition in its heyday reared upon the American amusement scene.

* * * *

There is, of course, no tangible basis upon which might be predicated a guess as to what might have happened had William Fox remained in control of the properties which he created, but the thought is inescapable that the record was one of development and ascent during his incumbency and not one of dismemberment and collapse. His, at least, was the adventurous and daring spirit of the showman and it is upon precisely that quality that the tremendous expansion of the industry has been based from the remote period of its inception as a source of major entertainment for the masses.

* * * *

IT was inevitable in the very nature of such a precipitate reorganization as was occasioned by the sudden transfer of the Fox Theater to the control of a previously competitive organization that executive heads should be reluctantly, but none the less effectually, lopped off and familiar names expunged from the roster of the theater's personnel.

This, I am confident, was no less a source of keen and genuine regret to those newly placed in charge than to those most directly affected and many of the rest of us who have had the pleasurable experience of watching what began as purely business contacts grow into the warmer relationships of friendship and, I hope, mutual regard.

Those who have assumed command, by the consideration and kindliness of their attitude in a situation fraught with possibilities of quick animosities and deep personal rancor, have added to the esteem in which they already were held. Those who depart from accustomed fields of conscientious effort and achievement leave with the consciousness that they carry with them the good will and best wishes of all those with whom they have had daily dealings as well as of a vast public that has been painstakingly and well served.

"The king is dead; long live the king."

* * * *

It is one of the distressing circumstances of the virtual decline and fall of the Fox Theaters Corporation that those who find themselves relieved of their local duties discover themselves in the peculiar predicament of having no "home office" to which to turn for new assignments. It is a condition that is unique even in an industry that has specialized in shattering precedent and adhering to no fixed course of ethical development.

* * * *

WITH the Belasco having put up its shutters for the summer—with the possibility, always, of some belated and unexpected "try-out" booking, or a purely local undertaking taking them briefly down again—and the National Theater Players settled down to the more placid pursuit of the original purposes of its ten-week season of repertoire offerings, the season of 1931-32 may fairly be said to have come to a close in the National Capital.

There still remain, however, the "premieres" of those al-fresco resorts which every year add to the possibility of enjoyment for the sated amusement seeker during the heated term. Of these, Glen Echo Park is the first to get under way.

Glen Echo, under the shrewd managerial guidance of Mr. Leonard B. Schloss, has survived through the years as an establishment of varied interests where every reasonable taste may find some diversion to its liking. This resort, perched high on the banks of the Potomac, in its time has had serious competition.

It is not beyond the memory of those still living that a quarter-century or so ago the most pretentious open air amusement park ever projected in this vicinity was thrown open to the public at about this time of year down at Four Mile Run, Va., about midway between the Capital and Alexandria. Luna Park it was called, and it was modeled as closely as might be after the gaudy Coney Island playground of the same name.

The most vivid recollection of Luna Park lingering in the memory of the music lover is that for the first year or two of its operation the management presented a succession of the best bands available in the country for engagements of varying lengths whose afternoon and evening concerts alone were of sufficient merit to attract crowds to a spot that was remote and not too easily or comfortably accessible in a day when motor cars were not so numerous as they are now.

It was at Luna Park, too, that a career that has attained some proportions in the field of theatrical publicity had its accidental genesis.

Luna Park's first press agent was a young man by the name of Robert Edgar Long, who conceived the inspired notion of throwing a herd of Mr. Barlow's pet elephants into a bogus stampede through the tranquil Virginia countryside with the vague and thoroughly ulterior motive of creating a state of things that might, perchance, engage the first-page interest of the editors of the daily press.

Mr. Long's success in his contemplated endeavor was greater than he had bargained for. The pachyderms, with a breath of freedom packed into their trunks, removed every counterfeit aspect from their collective lunges through back fences and garden plots and created a completely bona-fide reign of terror in the divergent paths of their destructiveness.

* * * *

Mr. Long's enthusiasms being deemed no longer a useful asset to the management of Luna Park, he identified himself with the National The-

SECOND WEEK FOR A TENSE COURT DRAMA

If you like your screen fare red-blooded and juicy in drama, you'll have a robust appetite for "Night Court," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's newest offering, which opened a second week at the Loew's Theater Friday. Here is a daring picture, presented in a striking manner, splendid in entertainment values.

Directed by W. S. Van Dyke from an original story by Mark Hellinger and Charles Beahan, the film takes as its premise the situation of an unscrupulous man, occupying the bench of a magistrate, using his court power to further the criminal activities in which he is involved. When a judicial inquiry threatens his security, the judge manages to "frame" an innocent girl, the accidental possessor of damaging information, and throws her in jail, where her revelations are hidden from inquisitorial minds.

Phillips Holmes, as the taxi driver whose young wife is sent to prison, heads the splendid cast. Walter Huston is magnificent in a role deserving of no sympathy—that of the crooked judge. Anita Page offers a surprise in the tragic role of the framed girl, turning in a performance that makes us wonder why this talent has been allowed to remain dormant beneath a jazz-baby veneer. Lewis Stone is the presiding jurist, who is slain by underworld hirelings, and Jean Hersholt is the tenement-house janitor, who unwittingly aids in the railroading of the chauffeur's wife.

SKY THRILLS AND A BREEZY STAGE REVUE

Two able screen performers, Jack Oakie and Richard Arlen, unite their talents in "Sky Bride," the feature picture at Loew's Palace Theater this week. The stage show is "Frivolities," from the Capitol Theater in New York City.

"Sky Bride" is a tale of the air, showing stunt birdmen at their best. Special camera work visualizes many difficult scenes of crashes in mid-air, spectacular feats and landings.

Jack Oakie and Richard Arlen, in the leading parts, play distinctly opposite roles. Arlen is the champion flier of the carnival and Oakie is a "barker" superordinary.

While going through their air routine one day Arlen and a flying companion crash many thousands of feet above the ground. They both are dashed to earth, one fatally injured and the other badly hurt. Arlen, who survives, resolves never to go into the air again, and for an occupation becomes a mechanic, not a very thrilling pastime for one of the best stunt performers in the country. Oakie remains with him, but can not understand the apparent loss of nerve on the part of his friend.

A sensational comeback on Arlen's part redeems him in the eyes of his friends and the girl he loves and brings the picture to a quick, dramatic close.

The production was directed by Stephen Roberts, an expert airman himself, who was responsible for many of the exceptional sky shots by the cameras.

Others in the cast besides Oakie and Arlen are Virginia Bruce, Robert Coogan, Charles Starrett, Louise Closser Hale, Tom Douglas and Harold Goodwin. The principals of "Touchdown," the great college movie, are all in "Sky Bride."

"Frivolities" features the ever-popular comedian, "Slim" Timblin, George D'Ormonde, Tom and Betty Wonder and the Chester Hale Frivolickers. It is a stage play of comedy, song and an unusual amount of dance.

The screen features will include a new issue of the Hearst Metrotone News and Harry Borjes' Orchestra and Charles Gaige at the organ will make their usual contributions to the bill.

A CROOK PLAY AND REVUE TO ENJOY AT FOX

The feature presentation at the Fox this week is the screen adaptation of Louis Joseph Vance's best seller, "Cheaters at Play." The cast is headed by Thomas Meighan, Charlotte Greenwood and Linda Watkins.

The gripping and fast-moving story is laid aboard a transatlantic liner and in New York, dealing with the efforts of international crooks to obtain possession of some very valuable emeralds. A love affair between one of the youthful crooks and the niece of the owner of the jewels complicates matters. The hilarious antics of Charlotte Greenwood make this film absorbing to all who view it.

The supporting cast includes William Bakewell, Ralph Morgan, Barbara Weeks, William Pawley and James Kirkwood.

On the stage Fanchon and Marco are presenting their peppy collegiate show, "The Co-Eds Idea," featuring Bussey and Case, Hubert Dyer and company, Robbins Trio, Griffith and Weston, Doyle Quadruplets, Jack Frost, Tudy and Lois and the Six Accordion Boys.

Phil Lampkin's musical offering and the Fox Movietonews round out the bill.

Once upon a time, as the children's books have it, a lanky 13-year-old school girl walked nervously into the office of a busy Boston stage manager, said she was the daughter of Frank Greenwood, a local merchant, and asked for a job in the chorus. She claimed to be considerably older than she was, and also claimed to be an experienced dancer.

The stage manager was doubtful, but he was late getting his show into production and there was a dearth of girls at that moment, so he grudgingly took her on trial. The following week the show opened, and Charlotte Greenwood made her debut before the footlights.

It wasn't long, however, before Charlotte advanced from the chorus to specialty bits and performed funny little steps that her long nether extremities enabled her to do. Presently she was found on Broadway, attracting attention in "The Passing Show" with these same unusual stunts.

WONDER FILM OF WAR HELD SECOND WEEK

Enthusiastic audiences have acclaimed the marvels of "The Doomed Battalion," and that new "All Quiet on the Western Front" of 1932, therefore, is continuing its successful reign for a second week at the Rialto Theater.

This outstanding picture of the current season, directed by Cyril Gardner, brings to the screen a tense, gripping tale of war, but war in a new setting, a locale of grim mountain peaks, terrific gales and blizzards, avalanches that sweep men to sudden death and snow-capped mountains that are the targets of the Italian troops encamped in the valley.

"The Doomed Battalion" marks the American debut of Tala Birell, latest European sensation to invade Hollywood, and finds her supported by a cast that includes Luis Trenker, who wrote the story; Victor Varconi, Gustav von Seyffertitz, Henry Armetta, C. Henry Gordon, Albert Conti and Gibson Gowland.

Trenker founded his story on actual occurrences of the Austro-Italian war front and the picture, as produced by Universal Pictures, is a direct translation into film action of the Trenker theme as written into a great war novel, "Mountains in Flame."

The Rialto completes its new program with selected short subjects and Graham McNamee as the Talking Reporter with the latest Universal News.

PICTURE PERSONALITIES HAVE ODD MEANS OF BEING THRIFTY

NO matter how extravagant one may be, he is sure to have some pet economy, to which he will strictly adhere, even though it entails loss of time, energy and possibly money, it has been revealed by a survey of the favorite saving methods of players, writers and directors at the Paramount studios in Hollywood.

Whenever Herman Mankiewicz receives stamped envelopes, he saves the unused stamp.

Miriam Hopkins, William Slavens McNutt and Slavko Vorkapich save on clothes, while Irving Pichel and Berthold Viertel confess that wearing of old hats is their favorite economy.

Marion Gering, Ernst Lubitsch and Clive Brook smoke their cigarettes or cigars to the "bitter end." Rouben Mamoulian and Louis Gasnier refuse to purchase matches.

Writers who have been bitten by the "saving bug" are Percy Heath, who squeezes his toothpaste tubes flat, and Waldemar Young, who saves the string which comes on packages.

When in Hollywood Lilyan Tashman stays at her Malibu Beach home and saves ocean voyage expenses, until she decides to save expenses by closing up the home and going on an ocean voyage. That's rather complicated, but she maintains the policy has saved her at least $50 in the last three years!

A Ford instead of a Rolls-Royce is Maurice Chevalier's pet economy.

Harpo Marx saves by not buying cat food. He has a dog. His brother, Groucho, saves dimes by putting every one that comes into his possession in the bank and tipping waiters with dollars instead.

Robert Coogan saves on toys, by bulldozing property men at the studio into making him bows and arrows and wooden swords. He has quite a collection.

The pet economies of Sylvia Sidney and Phillips Holmes are in time. They almost always travel by air when going from Hollywood to New York.

Miriam Hopkins saves energy. Although she plays the piano well she always carries a portable phonograph about with her and lets it provide the music.

Gene Raymond saves railway fare by traveling across-country in a Ford automobile whenever time permits.

George Bancroft insists on doing all the repairs and carpentry work needed at his beach home.

But the strangest economy of all is that of Claudette Colbert. She saves her legs! Never since she has been in motion pictures has she been photographed in a bathing suit. The reason is simple. When she was on the New York stage critics forgot to mention the histrionic worth of her performances in raving about her shapely limbs, so when she joined Paramount she insisted that thereafter she would depend upon her merits as an actress.

FAMOUS STAR MAKES FIRST FOR WARNERS

Ruth Chatterton introduces to screen fans a new idol in the person of George Brent, in her initial First National picture, "The Rich Are Always With Us," the attraction this week at Warner Bros.' Earle Theater. The vaudeville bill is headed by Mercedes, mental marvel, assisted by Mlle. Stantone, phenomenal musical mystic.

"The Rich Are Always With Us" is the story of the ultrasmart set, with its startling revelation of pungent gossip; with the colorful, mad scramble for amusement, the vicarious love affairs and scandals of the idle and excessively rich. It is a story of wives and husbands, scrambled at times and at other times not scrambled, but full of spice and tinged with a pretty romance that succeeds in spite of every handicap.

Miss Chatterton is supported by an unusually strong cast, which is headed by George Brent, handsome new leading man, and one predicted to be the screen sensation of 1932. Bette Davis, Adrienne Dore, John Miljan, Mae Madison, John Wray and Robert Warwick are also in the cast.

The stage activities are headed by Mercedes, who goes through the audience, obtains patrons' favorite song numbers and transmits the musical number to Mlle. Stantone, musical mystic, who plays the requested number on the piano. The act is said to be as sensationally startling as it is entertaining. Other acts are Irene Vermillion, who, with the three Beverly sisters and Kermit Dart, offers new dance steps; Talent and Merit, in a humorous interlude; Nate Busby and company, offering oddity in song and comedy and Maxine Doyle, mistress of ceremonies.

The program is completed by selected short-reel subjects, including the Graham McNamee newsreel.

Any picture that Alfred Green is directing is invariably a magnet for his brother directors. Any of them who may be "between pictures" while he is shooting manages to find a reason for dropping in on his sets. Add to this the opportunity to watch Ruth Chatterton at close range, and it is easy to understand why the production of "The Rich Are Always With Us" became a mecca for Warner directors with a moment of leisure and visiting directors from other studios.

One afternoon during the shooting of an important sequence, there were no less than five directors on the side lines of Miss Chatterton's set. Howard Hawks, who directed "The Crowd Roars" for Warners, dropped into pay his compliments to Miss Chatterton and Mr. Green; Dorothy Arzner, who directed Miss Chatterton in "Sarah and Son," was a friendly visitor; Mervyn Le Roy, director of "Little Caesar" and "The Five Star Final" looked in for half an hour; Roland Brown, picked to direct John Barrymore's first picture for RKO, was a watchful observer of the afternoon's activities, and John G. Adolfi, who made George Arliss' last two Warner Bros. pictures

Barbara Kent, Myrna Loy in "Vanity Fair"—RKO-Keith's.

MYRNA LOY IS REAL STAR AS BECKY SHARPE

Thackeray's famed fiction character of Becky Sharpe has reached the screen in an ultramodern version of "Vanity Fair," currently showing at RKO-Keith's as the feature attraction.

In creating his Becky Sharpe, Thackeray produced a best seller in the field of novels—one that has sold into so many editions that even the publishers cannot call off the number without consulting records.

In bringing "Vanity Fair" to the present-day screen, the story has been completely modernized. In addition to Becky Sharpe, however, all of the famed characters remain—Sir Crowley, his son, Rawdon; the Marquise, Amelia Sedley, her brother Joseph, and all of the others to which two generations have thrilled.

Becky, as portrayed by Myrna Loy, has been pronounced a perfect bit of casting and as a perfect performance by the player.

Others in the cast include Conway Tearle in his first screen role in several months; Barbara Kent, Walter Byron, Anthony Bushell, Billy Bevan, Montagu Love and Lionel Belmore.

Added screen subjects include a Chic Sale comedy, "A Slip at the Switch," a Tom and Jerry cartoon, a tribute to "Mothers Everywhere" and the Pathe News.

Although Myrna Loy has been a screen favorite for the past many seasons, it remained for "Vanity Fair of Today" to elevate her to real stardom. The famous Thackeray novel, depicting the character of Becky Sharpe, was just the theme that Miss Loy needed to give her full scope to present her own personality. The role of Becky, in the parlance of the screen, was "glove-fitting" to her particular talents. And now Myrna Loy is a real star in her own right.

A NOTED CASE ON SCREEN AT METROPOLITAN

The inside facts of the sensational love-slaying that shocked a nation describes in a few words "The Famous Ferguson Case," sensational First National and Vitaphone mystery, which is this week's screen offering at Warner Bros. Metropolitan Theater. Joan Blondell appears in the pivotal role.

A slain husband, an unhappy wife, another man—that was the problem faced by the detectives assigned to cover the case. The wife was suspected and her male friend arrested. Which of them was guilty? A warm and human love story runs through the exciting progress of the plot.

Although the title has been changed, to disguise the real life tragedy on which Courtenay Terrett, famous New York newspaperman, based the story of "The Famous Ferguson Case," many of those who see the film will recognize the true characters and remember their real names.

The cast, headed by the beautiful young Joan Blondell, also includes Tom Brown, Adrienne Dore, Walter Miller, Leslie Fenton, Vivienne Osborne, Purnell Pratt, Kenneth Thompson and Grant Mitchell.

A diversified program of short reel subjects, consisting of Richy Craig, popular vaudeville star, in "Maybe I'm Wrong;" a Vitaphone hodge-podge of nonsense; Doug Stansbury, Roxy vocal artist, in "Campus Spirit," and a new issue of the Paramount Sound News round out the bill.

Courtenay Terrett, writer of "The Famous Ferguson Case," became New York's ace newsgatherer in nine years, a brief time as reportorial success goes.

Terrett, known to fellow reporters as "Brick," began his meteoric newspaper career in Butte, Mont., as cub reporter on the Butte Miner. Coming East to Columbia University, Terrett could not wait for his degree, but immediately sought employment in New York's historic Park Row. At 18 he was given a job on the Tribune rewrite desk. In two years he had become assistant city editor. Terrett then moved over to the Evening Post, transferring to the Telegram after two and a half years with the Post. His Telegram job was followed in 1929 by a position with the Morning World, lasting until that paper passed into history.

"Brick" Terrett has written into "The Famous Ferguson Case" all the highlights of his own sensational association with the biggest stories that broke in the papers during the past decade.

Culbertson on Bridge

By ELY CULBERTSON

308.

LESSON NO. 23.

This is the twenty-third of a series of articles in response to requests from numerous readers, designed to explain the elementary principles of Contract Bridge. One of these will appear each week. In them Mr. Culbertson will write especially for the benefit of those who have never played Contract and who may even be unfamiliar with the methods of playing it. The articles will cover the game from its basic elements to the higher phases of Contract Bridge. The series in its entirety will comprise a complete course in "How to Play Contract."

The following deal illustrates some happy finessing possibilities:

South—Dealer.

North: ♠ 7 6 2 ♡ 9 8 7 6 ◇ 8 2 ♣ A Q J 9

West: ♠ J 10 5 ♡ 5 3 ◇ Q J 6 5 ♣ K 8 5 3

East: ♠ K Q 9 8 ♡ K 10 4 2 ◇ 10 7 3 ♣ 10 7

South: ♠ A 4 3 ♡ A Q J ◇ A K 9 4 ♣ 6 4 2

The bidding goes as follows:

South	West	North	East
1◇	Pass	1NT	Pass
3NT	Pass	Pass	Pass

South, using the Approach principle, starts low with his biddable suit. North, having 1½ honor-tricks, only a four-card biddable suit, which it is dangerous to show at the range of two, and lacking adequate trump support, makes the negative response of one notrump, which is nevertheless a sound bid. South, with 4½ honor-tricks in three suits and taking a chance that North has some of his 1½ honor-tricks in clubs, raises once for each honor-trick he has over the 2½ shown by his Opening bid and jumps to game.

When the Dummy goes down, North sees that he can probably make his contract, for he has 1 spade trick, 2 heart tricks, 2 diamond tricks and 2 club tricks, with a probability of a long-suit-trick in clubs and at least one successful finesse.

The play proceeds, trick by trick, as follows (the name printed in bold face indicates the winner of the trick):

Trick 1—East spade 8, Dummy spade 3, West spade 10, North spade 2. Declarer permits the first trick to be won by the opponents, in order to keep control of the spade suit. With only 1 spade trick, the Declarer must lose 2 tricks in the suit, and thinks it safe to lose these at once so that, if a finesse fails later and the opponents get the lead, there will be less chance that established spades will be run against him.

Trick 2—West spade J, North spade 8, East spade K, Dummy spade 4.

Trick 3—East spade Q, Dummy spade A, West spade 5, North spade 7.

Trick 4—Dummy club 2, West club 3, North club J, East club 7. Declarer takes his first finesse. The god of distribution is smiling.

Trick 5—North heart 9, East heart 10, Dummy heart J, West heart 3. Another finesse succeeds.

Trick 6—Dummy club 4, West club 5, North club Q, East club 10. Declarer knows pretty well where the club King is and makes the most of it.

Trick 7—North heart 8, East heart 2, Dummy heart Q, West heart 5. Again Declarer is pretty sure he knows the whereabouts of the King.

Declarer may well pause to cogitate at this point. He knows that two rounds of hearts have been played, accounting for eight cards; he sees three remaining in his own hand and in Dummy. If the remaining two, one of which is the King, are divided, he can drop the King with the Ace, and the fourth heart in his own hand will be established. He, therefore, cashes the heart Ace from the Dummy.

Trick 8—Dummy heart A, West discards diamond 5, North heart 7, East heart 4. It's no go—but nothing has been lost.

Trick 9—Dummy club 6, West club 8, North club 9, East discards diamond 3. Remembering the clubs that have been played, Declarer successfully finesses the nine! If West had played the King, North would have won with the Ace and led the established nine.

Trick 10—North club A, East discards diamond 7, Dummy discards diamond 4, West club K.

Trick 11—North diamond 2, East diamond 10, Dummy diamond A, West diamond 6.

Trick 12—Dummy diamond K, West diamond J, North diamond 8, East discards spade 9.

Trick 13—Dummy diamond 9, West diamond Q, North discards heart 6, East discards heart K.

Result—North and South, 10 tricks; game at notrump, 105 points in the trick-score, and 50 points in the honor-score for 1 extra trick.

The importance of remembering the cards played is clearly demonstrated by the Declarer's progressive reasoning in the play of this interesting hand. The student may argue that the extra tricks won by the Declarer are due to luck. Certainly they are. The original holding of high cards was due to luck also, for the fall of the cards at every deal is a matter of pure chance. Tricks are favors bestowed by the great god of card distribution, to whom all Contract players make frequent obeisance, and on whom all Contract players cast imprecations at ever-recurring intervals. The god may frown as often as he smiles.

But the imaginative Contract player will plan to take every advantage of the favors of the god of distribution when he does smile, while, at the same time, he will be careful not to jeopardize his contract by risking the dire consequences of a severe frown.

TODAY'S POINTER.

A finesse at Bridge is an effort to take advantage of the position of outstanding cards in order to gain a trick. As applied to Contract, it has a direct analogy to the encircling movement in warfare.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS.

Two-bids to the Score and Jump Overcalls.

Question 1: When there is a part-score, and an initial two-bid is made, is it a Forcing bid?

Answer: An Opening two-bid is a Forcing bid only when below a game contract. A bid higher than the game contract or a two notrump can be used for Slam invitation in lieu of the regulation two-bid.

Question 2: If a following bidder makes an unnecessary two-bid, for example two hearts over one club, is that a Forcing bid?

Answer: A Jump Overcall after the bidding has been opened by an opponent is not a Forcing bid. To force partner to bid, in this situation, either a Takeout Double or an Overcall in the bid suit of the opponent can be used. However, a Jump Overcall is a strength-showing bid and requests (not demands) partner to keep the bidding open with anything but a blank.

All Raises in One Breath.

Question: If I start with an Opening one-bid and my partner takes out with another suit for which I hold support, do I give all my Raises immediately just as the Supporting Hand responds to an Opening bid?

Answer: Yes, in all situations, full value of Raises are given in one bid.

Mr. Culbertson will be glad to answer any specific question on bidding or play sent in by readers. Address him in care of The Washington Post, inclosing a 2-cent stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Einstein's Moving To America Denied

Meager Income Blamed for Professor Considering Leaving Germany.

Berlin (A.P.).—Rumors in America that Prof. Albert Einstein, father of the relativity theory, had decided to settle down in the United States for good have drawn a denial from members of his family.

"There's nothing to that," declared Dimitri Marianoff, his son-in-law. "The professor has no intention of settling in America."

From friends it was learned, however, that the Einsteins did, indeed, consider the possibility for a while of quitting Germany. The reason was the following: Prof. Einstein's income from German sources amounts to only about $250 per month. Since he has various relatives dependent upon him, this is too meager. He therefore increases his income by lectures and other activities abroad.

Peggy J. Proves She's Not Ordinary Goose

Penn Yan, N. Y. (U.P.).—Peggy J., owned by Mrs. J. F. Goundry, is no ordinary goose.

Peggy lays eggs so large that one of them, mixed with two quarts of milk, will make enough custard for the family.

Every spring Peggy goes on an eccentric production schedule. On alternate days she lays a huge double-yolked egg weighing ten ounces. It measures 11 inches around.

When hot weather sets in, she settles down to one normal egg a day.

McGoofey's First Reader

By H. I. PHILLIPS.

WHO is this?

This is Sydney.

Who is Sydney?

Sydney is a typical American citizen.

What is he doing?

He is rushing for the 5:26.

He appears to be having difficulties, doesn't he?

Yes, Sydney is pretty well burdened for speed.

What is he carrying?

Oh, garden seeds, fertilizer, bulbs, shrubs, spades, hoes, rakes, trowels and books on planting.

What is the idea of all this junk?

Sydney is feeling the spring urge to plant a garden.

Is it necessary to carry home all that truck at once to do this?

No, but like most men, when that vernal urge hits them, he wants to do everything immediately.

What kind of garden is he going to have?

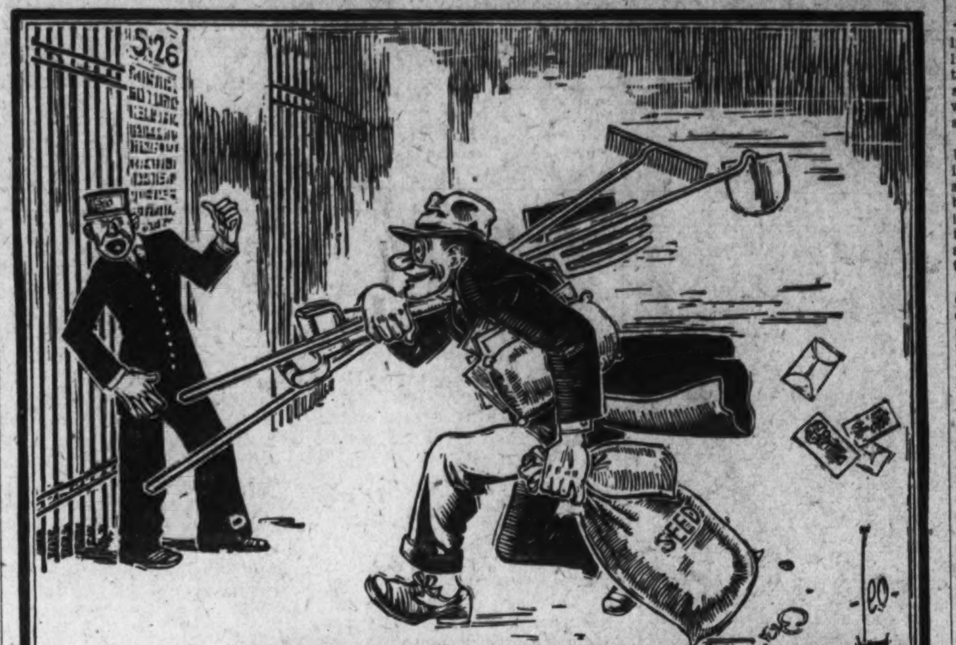
Your guess is as good as ours. It all depends.

It all depends on what?

On whether Sydney's enthusiasm a month from now is as high as it is at the moment.

Do these home garden enthusiasts let their enthusiasm run down?

You'd be surprised.



OUR FEATHERED FRIENDS.

The chicken leads a happy life—
It just goes "Cluck-cluck-cluck"
So any listener can tell
That it is not a duck.

It's fed on corn and crumbs of bread,
And never has to beg;
It hasn't any work to do
Except to lay an egg.

And when that job's attended to
There's nothing else to tackle;
It merely gets right off the nest
And then proceeds to cackle.

THE STORY OF ZELDA.

ZELDA never had any real passion for music.

As a child she couldn't even carry an air, but her parents insisted on trying to give her a musical training.

They were of the school that believed a parent's first duty to an offspring was to teach it to play some musical instrument.

They had the old-fashioned feeling that no child could get off on the right foot in life without being a "moosicker."

Zelda was a difficult problem. She didn't like lessons.

They tried her on the piano and fiddle and everything.

Her progress was so slow that the teachers grew gray at the temples trying to get her to absorb things.

The teachers wanted to pass her up as no bargain, but mommer and popper insisted she must learn to play something.

They never ceased lecturing the poor kid on the importance of a musical education.

They told her it was good for the soul, and would also be a great thing for her socially.

"You may not realize it now, but when you grow up the ability to play a musical instrument will be one of the great satisfactions of your life," they said. "It will bring you peace and rest and contentment in those hours when everything else fails."

They told her it would be a refining influence, and be a means of meeting nice people.

So Zelda plugged away and took to her music in a serious way. And what do you think it got her?

She turned out to be a female cornetist in an amusement park band!

Moral: If they don't want it, don't push 'em.

Kansan Makes Bows And Arrows as Hobby

Larned, Kans (U.P.).—J. H. Lingenfelder, of Hanston, has a hobby believed to be unique in the field—the making of bows and arrows. He has a collection of which the most bloodthirsty Indian might well be proud.

One of his latest productions is a bow with tips made from cow's horns and a grip of curly walnut, veneered in the Osage orange wood of the bow. It is strung with a plaited cord of Irish linen, also made by Ligenfelder, which has a tensile strength of 1,000 pounds.

Wild Geese Prove To Be Movie Actors

Taking a position in a cornfield, Allen made sound movies of a flock of geese feeding nearby.

"They acted just as if they knew they were having their pictures taken," Allen said. "They rose and settled down right in front of the camera. One of them even came up and hissed at the lens."

About the Chess Table

By WILLARD H. MUTCHLER

The lone game remaining in the District of Columbia Chess League's championship tournament, that between V. Sournin, the present leader, and present Champion F. B. Walker, was adjourned. We understand that Sournin was a pawn ahead at the end of the first sitting, and if such is the case, his chances of acquiring the titular honors this year are excellent.

The league's team tournament went into its second lap as Model Basin furnished a complete surprise by defeating the strong Agriculture team to the tune of 3½ to 1½. The Y. M. C. A. team, which finished in a tie for the lead with Falls Church during the first half, defeated Chevy Chase by a score of 3 to 2, despite the fact that the victors defaulted one game. The complete summaries are appended:

Bd.	Agriculture.	W.	Model Basin.	W.
1	Roberts	0	Windenberg	1
2	Kalmbach	1	Norley	0
3	Skinner	0	Peterson	1
4	Kurtz	1	Frisby	0
5	Hervey	0	Bowers	1
	Total	2	Total	3

Bd.	Y. M. C. A.	W.	Chevy Chase.	W.
1	R. Sherfy	1	Shepard	0
2	L. Sherfy	1	Adams	0
3	deLesdernier.	½	Parks	½
4	Drysdale	1	Tucker	1
5	Default	0	Wilkins	0
	Total	3½	Total	1½

Junior Championship.

In the fourth round of the tourney to determine the holder of the District's junior championship title, the surprise of the week was W. Schlessinger's defeat of J. B. Hickam. The victor is affiliated with the Central team, while Hickam is one of Western's aces. J. M. Drysdale, of Western, defeated A. Seidenberg, of Central, in the only other game contested. F. Tilton, of Western, the leader, was scheduled to meet J. Ervin, of McKinley, but the game was postponed. The standing to date is as follows:

Player.	Won.	Lost.
F. Tilton	2	0
J. M. Drysdale	3½	½
J. B. Hickam	1½	1½
W. Schlessinger	2	2
J. Ervin	1	2
A. Seidenberg	1	2
J. Spalding	0	3

As we go to press we learn that the Falls Church team has withdrawn from competition in the "five-man" team tourney during its second half. The University of Maryland is entering a team to fill the vacancy. We also learn that we erred a few weeks ago in regard to the Falls Church vs. Model Basin match, which finished with the score of 4 to 1 in favor of the former. Peterson, of Model Basin, defeated Hillyer, of Falls Church. The win was previously reported for Hillyer, for which we offer our apologies.

Solution to Problems.

The key to No. 479 is B—R7. Among those sending in solutions were Jacob Frech, J. W. Harris, Fred T. Hafelfinger and W. E. Bryant.

Jacob Frech writes: "Problem 479, a first prize problem by the well known H. W. Barry is a marvelous one and generates about 50,000 series It soon impresses the sager solver with the thought that if it is truly a two-mover, it may take 50,000 hours to solve it, because he is met with a seemingly perfect defense by every one of black's best moves. Nevertheless, within three minutes after seeing the problem I happily conjecture that, if it is a sound one, only B—R7 can be the key move. How did that happen? Well, 2,250 years ago Aristotle discovered that to reason on a problem is to syllogize and that sagacity is a certain happy extempore conjecture of the middle term of the syllogism relevant to that problem. Fortunately, but unexpectedly, I found sagacity on duty. How can sagacity operate on a problem as difficult as this one? Well, here is how it did operate on this one:

"Assume that white has made his first (as yet unknown) move. Now, if black R or B or Kt (Kt4) moves anywhere, white can mate on second move; but no way of forcing black to make these moves is as yet conceivable. Black has only two other pieces that can move, Kt(Kt3) and a P. If P—B5 white R could capture it and mate were it not that black Kt can capture the R; but now that black P has moved, sagacity can instantly see that if white B were on R7 that Kt could be pinned. If that P had not been moved that possibility of pinning could not have been readily seen. It is now merely a matter of scientifically verifying every premise of the hypothesis or theory that B—R7 is the keymove. As the problem generates 21 two-move mates, and as some of the mating moves are as well concealed as the keymove, this requires careful, logically trained study. The resulting relevant middle term is: A problem in which white can force one of the following only quickest forced mate series: 1 B—R7; 2 Q—K2 or B3 or Kt4 or R—B4 or B—B5 or Kt—Q2 or B5 or Kt5.

"The science of chess problem solving is the only science at present that can demonstratively teach our educators, our scientists and our public-spirited solvers of public problems that if they do not succeed in finding the relevant middle terms (or diagnoses) of any of their problems, they have not succeeded in solving them, and that adequate remedy is systematic, adequate reverification of premises."

Fred T. Hafelfinger comments: "The key is B—R7. As the board stands, black K can not move, four pawns are blocked, moves of the B, R or Kt on KKt4 will mean mate by Q or Kt outside of the keymove. This leaves black P on KB4 and Kt on KKt3 as the features. The keymove ties that diagonal row."

REPRESENTATIVE EWIN L. DAVIS, of Tennessee, chairman of the House radio committee, believes that the scale of radio station license in the Senate bill, estimated to bring in $670,000, will not yield sufficient income, and indicates he will make an effort to have the amount increased.

Despite rumors that it had fallen by the wayside following a meeting in Washington of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, a bill will soon be introduced by him into the House limiting radio advertising to the name of the sponsor and perhaps a fifteen-word description of the product.

"I think that radio ought to pay its own way," Representative Davis declared. "The bill now before the Senate provides for only $670,000, whereas the cost of running the Federal Radio Commission and the Radio Division is close to $1,000,000 a year.

"I am not at all satisfied with the way the license fees are fixed in the bill. In the first place, they make no distinction between commercial and noncommercial stations. Educational institutions, churches and municipalities which operate broadcasting stations without profit are required to pay just as much as commercial stations. Fixing the program broadcasting station license fee is relatively easy. However, they comprise but 600 out of 27,000 broadcasting stations, which come under 21 different classifications, such as commercial telegraph stations, ships, &c."

COMPULSORY allotment of broadcasting time to educational institutions is a matter which Representative Davis is giving much attention. He favors this method as against allocating to them a certain percentage of the broadcasting channels for facilities.

"I favor giving State institutions of learning as much time as they can properly utilize," Representative Davis went on. "They can't possibly use all the time for cultural and educational purposes, as they would have to do if they ran their own stations, and therefore they would have to resort to entertainment and then they would be giving the public the same thing as the other stations. Nevertheless, I want the people to get just as much educational and cultural information as they possibly can and I think it is the duty of the Government to encourage and promote efforts to popularize programs of that character.

"If an educational institution knows a year in advance that it is entitled to a certain amount of time, it can carefully work out its programs. If it can secure 10 per cent, say, of the time of a broadcasting station without cost and without responsibility of maintaining stations, what more could it possibly ask for? Certainly that would be better than the institution finding it necessary to scurry around and try to raise revenue to operate a station itself."

IF THE provision is retained in the economy bill which compels retired Army or Navy officers actively employed, drawing more than $3,000, to choose between retirement pay or compensation from civil employments, there is a contingency the Federal Radio Commission may lose its chairman, Gen. Charles McK. Saltzman.

In view of the fact that reports have arisen from time to time that Gen. Saltzman felt that he had served a sufficient time on the Radio Commission, it is presumed he would choose to retire from the commission rather than lose his Army retired pay.

A second ruling affecting the Federal Radio Commission, as well as other Government departments, is that there shall be no promotions and no filling of vacancies without the written consent of the President. There are at present three vacancies on the Federal Radio Commission—an assistant to the general counsel, a junior lawyer and a clerkship in the legal division.

A rider to the economy measure, one which would require the commission to move its offices from the National Press Building back to the Interior Department, in order to save rent.

AN announcement that will mean triumph for five American composers will be made tonight when the final orchestral awards program is presented over WRC at 9:15 o'clock. The five compositions that were played last Sunday for a committee of musical experts through the country will be repeated tonight. The names of the winners will be announced and their works presented in the order of their ranking. The awards will be made as follows: First, $5,000; second, $2,500; third, $1,250; fourth, $750, and fifth, $500. At the conclusion of last Sunday's preliminary playing the widely scattered committee, which included a group of Washingtonians, headed by Hans Kindler, voted by telegraph upon the merits of each composition, and after a final tabulation of the vote the five winning compositions were selected.

Music by the band of the Grenadier Guards, one of England's crack historic regiments which is noted also for its musical section, and a broadcast from Berlin by Arnold Zweig, author of "The Case of Sergt. Grischa," comprise the two international programs to be heard through WMAL today.

The Guards Band, under the direction of Capt. G. Miller, will be picked up during a broadcast from the London studios of the BBC, beginning at 9:30 a. m. In memory of the American "march king," the late John Philip Sousa, a program devoted entirely to his works has been selected.

Two hours later the regular Sunday international broadcast will present the author of "The Case of Sergeant Grischa," which was the first of the war novels to become a best-seller in the United States. The subject of his radio address will be "Has Europe Fought Its Last War?"

AMERICAN listeners will hear the music, song and gayety from "Haus Vaterland," famous German restaurant, when a program is broadcast from the Berlin garden over WRC at 3:30 p. m. today.

Many thousands of American travelers are familiar with "Haus Vaterland," which includes within its walls a dozen different dining halls, each featuring the food, drink, music and entertainment, as well as the decorations and atmosphere, of a different nation.

The St. Olaf Lutheran Choir, America's pioneer A Cappella Choir, will be heard in a concert of sacred music to be broadcast over WMAL today at 12:30 p. m. Under the direction of Dr. F. Melius Christiansen, the program of a cappella selections will be broadcast from WCCO in Minneapolis.

Every year since 1912, the choir has toured the country, giving recitals in the Metropolitan Opera House, New York; Orchestral Hall, Chicago; the new Public Auditorium, Cleveland, and numerous other famous concert halls.

Details of the broadcast follow:

"Built on the Rock the Church Doth Stand" (Lindeman), choral anthem, with Alvin Lewis, barytone soloist; "Agnus Dei" (Kallinikoff); "This Is the Sight That Gladdens" (Crueger); "Lost in the Night" (Finnish folk song), Gertrude Boe Overby, soprano soloist; "O Sacred Head Now Wounded" (Hassler); two German Christmas songs, "Heiligste Nacht" and "Geistliches Wiegenlied," and "Praise to the Lord" (Shren).

Cecilia Loftus, one of the greatest mimics the American stage has ever known, will play the role of Freda, niece of Peter Stuyvesant, in the "Roses and Drums" episode this afternoon (WMAL, 5:30 o'clock).

The Nat. Players in a Milne Drama—Glen Echo Open

RICH FANTASY OFFERED THIS WEEK BY NATS

Tomorrow night, on the stage of the National, the National Theater Players will present one of the really fine dramas of the modern stage, "Michael and Mary," a play by A. A. Milne, the English playwright.

No play of recent years has caused so much favorable comment as "Michael and Mary." Its author was rated on a par with that other painter of fantasy on the stage, Sir James M. Barrie, who gave the world "Peter Pan."

While there is a trace of fantasy in "Michael and Mary," the author deals with real life, though the opening sequences of the play might easily have taken place in a dream. It is idealism. It is the meeting of youth and the immediate bloom of love. That is the poetry of "Michael and Mary," a play that later comes to tussle with the hard, cold facts of life.

The opening scene is laid in the British Museum. Michael goes there to keep a rendezvous with his sweetheart who never before has been late. While he is impatiently waiting, his eyes roam to a rather forlorn creature, Mary, also waiting for somebody. They strike up a conversation, which leads into a flirtation, a companionate marriage and later marriage and children.

Milne carries his audience through two generations—and the play moves rapidly from that first meeting. Naturally, Donald Woods will be cast as Michael and Leona Powers as Mary—two modern characters that have no superiors on the English speaking stage. These two players will be supported by other members of the cast, Mrs. Hibbard, Forrest Orr, Raymond Bramley, Ona Munson, Owen Davis, Jr., and Kathryn Givney.

A play that had its first production in London and ran a full season on Broadway, "Michael and Mary" is filled with all the elements that delight the theatergoer's heart. Mary, to begin with, is a poor unknown girl. Michael is the son of a respected son of the established church. They violate the conventions, but come, eventually, to the fullness of life.

Two matinees are scheduled, Wednesday and Saturday.

GLEN ECHO IS OPEN FOR THE OUTDOOR FANS

Glen Echo Park, Washington's big playground, is now open, and thousands of visitors, young and old, gave a great big hand to the new season yesterday. They found the entire park shining like a brand new pin, and improvements here, there and everywhere.

Rest rooms for both ladies and gentlemen, landscape gardening, walks and all buildings have been improved.

Right on the job when the "whistle blew" were the speedy roller coaster, the thrilling whip, the airplane swings, "dodgem rides" and other major diversions which grow more enticing every year. The old mill, attractive as it was last year, is even more so now, many new scenes having been installed. The finest shooting galleries, newer and better refreshment stands, and that great "use of fun, the midway, still register 100 per cent in popularity.

Dancing continues to be one of the high spots, under the direction of MacWilliams and his orchestra, every evening except Sunday, from 8:30 to 11:30.

The big news about the magnificent swimming pool is to the effect that it will open on May 28 in a blaze of glory. This is an eagerly anticipated event.

In the days before the automobile the family picnic party was one of the highlights of the summer, and this good old-fashioned custom is still a major pleasure, especially when the site selected is Glen Echo Park, where every accommodation is available.

Already many organizations have booked reservations, and to the Overseas Band, Bugle and Drum Corps of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, belongs the honor of being first, on Monday, May 9. This organization is staging at the park a big frolic, band concert and dancing party, and in addition to the concert to be rendered by the entire band, Messrs. Alvin I. Lorig, commander of the Military Band Drum and Bugle Corps, and C. B. Jennings, department commander, promise many innovations and features that will be of general interest to the public.

Dance Recital.

Marian Chace and Lester Shafer will make their second annual appearance with their pupil dance group on Friday evening, May 27 at 8:30 o'clock at Wardman Park Theater. The program will consist of 21 numbers, with only the pupils of the professional classes appearing on this program

A duet number of distinction will be given by the principals on the program in their "Scriabin Suite" in which they will both also have solo parts. Miss Chace will be the central figure in a newly created group dance interpretation of the first movement of Beethoven's "Sonata Pathetique" and will this season have a similar position in "De Profundis."

Owen Davis, Jr., in "Michael and Mary" —National.

Mme. Schumann-Heink —Constitution Hall, Monday.

AT THE PLAY IN NEW YORK

By MARK BARRON.

NEW YORK, May 7 (A.P.).—Broadway's dwindling ranks of feminine stars have been augmented during the spring season by three young actresses who learned that the Cinderella legend sometimes comes true.

These are Dorothy Hall, of Meadville, Pa.; Katharine Hepburn, of New Haven, Conn., and Margaret Hamilton, of Cleveland and Columbus, Ohio.

Miss Hall, a blonde who has been one of the town's prettiest ingenues for the past several years, suddenly blossomed with a startling dramatic performance in "Child of Manhattan" that elevated her to stardom overnight.

Immediately, movie and stage producers, including the Theater Guild, began making efforts to sign her to contracts. For her next vehicle she finally selected "Gilded Lily," a new comedy by George Abbott and Philip Dunning, the same two who turned out "Broadway."

Miss Hepburn attracted some attention two seasons ago when she supported Jane Cowl in "Art and Mrs. Bottle." But it was as the Crown Princess of the Amazons in "Warrior's Husband" that she was elevated among the leading women of the stage.

Miss Hamilton was making her Broadway debut in "Another Language" when she attracted the most laudatory comments in a cast that contained several outstanding players.

She has appeared in several productions in Cleveland and Columbus, and had been brought on to New York to begin a concert tour in a program of dramatic sketches. Instead, she went into the Rose Franken play.

THE late Edgar Wallace was a voluminous and consistently entertaining writer, especially of the type of stories known as "thrillers."

This week brought his "The Man Who Changed His Name" to Broadway, with Frank Conroy and Fay Bainter in the leading roles. At times the plot runs a little thin, but the always excellent performances of Conroy and Miss Bainter buoy it into an entertaining evening.

Conroy, as a Canadian in England, fails to tell his new wife, Miss Bainter, that he had changed his name. She accidentally learns this just about the time that she thinks he is about to discover she was planning to elope with another man.

Immediately all believe that he changed his name because he had committed murder and was in hiding. Wallace sweeps his idea on from there in a tidal wave of double meanings.

PEGGY FEARS, "Follies" beauty, who turned producer, has set up an ambitious schedule for herself next season.

First on her program is "Saint Wench," from the pen of John Colton, coauthor of "Rain." She plans to have either Helen Menken or Mary Duncan in the leading role. She has another play, probably for Lenore Ulric, called "Tell Me, Pretty Maiden." The author of this is John Kirkland.

THORNTON WILDER, author of "The Bridge of San Luis Rey," is turning playwright. He has written several dramas for publication, but now he is doing one for the stage.

It is "Kiari," an adaptation of "The Bride of Torozko," a Hungarian comedy, by Otto Indig. Gilbert Miller will be the producer.

COMING STAGE ATTRACTIONS

NEXT week, beginning Monday, May 16, the National Theater Players will revive a play written by a former student of Georgetown University, the celebrated Willard Mack, a real writer of melodramas. The play rates as one of the finest pieces of stirring drama written in this century. It is called "Tiger Rose."

The late David Belasco was the original producer of "Tiger Rose" and starred in the title role was Lenore Ulric, then at the height of her career. The Ulric role now falls to Leona Powers, leading woman with the Players.

As theatergoers may recall, "Tiger Rose" has a romantic background in the North Country—the country that Robert W. Service first put on the map with his stirring poems. Naturally, the Northwest Mounted play a big part in this drama of life in the open spaces.

The National Theater Players have the honor of being the first to present this stirring drama as part of a stock repertory in Washington.

FOR the week beginning with matinee performance on Sunday, May 15, Mr. Jimmy Lake's Gayety Theater will offer as its attraction the "Auto Girls." This is an up-to-date burlesque organization, featuring an able corps of versatile comedians, clever dancers and singers with real voices.

The group of principals is supported by a chorus of comely young women no less notable for their agility than for their beauty of face and figure.

Lisa Gardiner.

Lisa Gardiner and her Senior Dance Group will present a program of dances Saturday night, May 14, at 8:30 o'clock in Wardman Park theater, features of which will be "Chopiniana," a classical ballet; "Lamia," a modern ballet, and "Viva La Republica," a series of Spanish dances.

Miss Gardiner herself will be seen in a number of solos, including two Chopin waltzes, in one of which she will be assisted by an ensemble of fifteen dancers. She will likewise take part in a delightful comedy number, "Theme Varie," assisted by members of her group.

Miss Gardiner will also dance a new interpretation of the age-old story of "Harlequin;" a Spanish number, "Corrida," and "Paso Doble," in which she will be assisted by the ensemble of dancers including Christine Stewart, Eda Vomachka, Martha Bounds, Jane Dunscombe, Katharine Vaughan and Virginia Hortenstine.

Going Strong.

Club Michel, 1 Thomas Circle, acclaimed the favorite night haunt of Washington's gay and smart set, presents as the feature of its current floor revue Jan and Jaina Wilde, two clever sisters, who come to Club Michel direct from an engagement at the famous Hollywood Country Club in Florida.

By popular demand, Audrey and Severin, the sensational dance team, are being held over at the club for a third week.

QUADRUPLETS. The Doyle sisters, Adelaide, Patsy, Mimi and Catherine, who offer one of the novelties of the "Co-eds" stage revue at the Fox.

BETTY WONDER, one of the attractive personalities whose talents lend charm to the Loew "Frivolities" revue, current on the Palace stage.

IRENE VERMILLION, the "pert personality dancer," one of the major attractions of the vaudeville bill booked for the present week at the Earle.

Gertie Reed with "Wine, Woman and Song" —Gayety.

BICENTENNIAL MUSIC WEEK'S ACE ARTISTS

With America's beloved songstress, Mme. Schumann-Heink, taking the leading role, Bicentennial Music Week, arranged under the auspices of the District of Columbia George Washington Bicentennial Commission, will open in Constitution Hall tomorrow night with a program to be continued nightly at 8:30 o'clock through next Friday evening.

Mme. Schumann-Heink arrived in Washington last evening in fulfillment of a promise made months ago to the local George Washington Commission to lend her voice in tribute to George Washington whenever the District Commission should call upon her. At the concert tomorrow night she will sing two long-time favorites with American audiences—"Danny Boy" and "Taps."

Mme. Schumann-Heink is making her reentry to Washington as soloist with the Philadelphia Harmonica Band, which, under the leadership of Albert N. Hoxie, will present a program of unique and varied interest. Sixty Philadelphia schoolboys, ranging in age from 10 to 17 years, comprise this band, which for more than ten years has been in the forefront of the harmonica movement in this country.

The general program, opening with such promise on Monday evening, will include a wide range of musical talent night by night, till the end of the series Friday evening with a concert by the senior and junior high schools of Washington under the direction of Dr. Edwin N. C. Barnes, supervisor of music in the Washington public schools.

The world famed Paulist Choristers will present the program on Tuesday evening. This is the first time the choir has been in Washington for nine years. Its response was prompt to the invitation to participate in the Bicentennial celebration extended by Dr. George C. Havenner, executive vice president of the local commission. The program to be presented by the Paulist Choristers will include secular as well as sacred music and will range all the way from lullabys of the thirteenth and sixteenth centuries to modern Russian works.

On Wednesday evening a massed chorus will present the cantata, "Washington," assisted by the United States Marine Band Orchestra, Capt. Taylor Branson, leader. This cantata, text by Edward C. Potter and music by R. Deane Shure, was especially written for the George Washington Bicentennial. The chorus has been organized by Mrs. Gertrude Lyons, president of the District of Columbia Federation of Music Clubs.

A special offering will be announced for Thursday evening, and the program by the public schools will be given on Friday evening.

GAYETY HAS A PEPPERY BILL

"Wine, Woman and Song," headed by that dynamic Miss Georgia Sothern, will be the attraction at the Gayety Theater, starting with the usual Sunday matinee today.

Miss Sothern has been held over by popular demand, and will be seen in new songs and dances. Assisting her will be found the cream of the feminine burlesque crop. As guest stars will be seen Gypsy Rae Reed and Gertie Reed, and as added attraction Betty Duval will make her first appearance of the season.

Others who will be found in support of Miss Sothern are Dot Alexander, Frankie Ralston, Jeanette Alabassi, Lew Denny, Les Sponsler, Chuck Callahan, Lou Powers and Billy Fields.

Monday is gift night, Wednesday is auction night and Friday is amateur night.

THOUGHTS ON EARLY SUMMER

ater in this city and, at the moment, is one of the principal mouthpieces for the major activities of that astute showman, Mr. Samuel Goldwyn. Pictures with elephants in them, I am nevertheless given to understand, usually are assigned to Mr. Lynn Farnol instead of to Mr. Robert E. Long!

* * * *

IT seems assured, as this is written in the early hours of Thursday morning, that the testimonial performance planned to reimburse the members of the National Theater Players who voluntarily "took a cut" in order to meet the monetary demands of the musicians' union and thus perpetuate a stock season that for a time seemed doomed to an early demise, will be presented a week from tonight on the stage of the National Theater.

This, it should be understood, is to be an informal "family affair" designed purely to permit those who have expressed a desire to help, an equitable and enjoyable means of doing so and to promote an even greater spirit of camaraderie between the Players and their season subscribers and the general public than already exists—if that is possible.

In all discussions of this proposed frolic it is important that it be borne in mind that apart from any consideration of sentiment, the entertainment to be provided will be well worth the scale of admissions to be assessed.

The personnel of the Players comprises a gifted group, every member of which, I think, has participated in benefits without number, impromptu programs of a variety of sorts, vaudeville, N. V. A. nights and all those other manifestations of the spirit of the theater that require a rapid play of versatility and a ready willingness to be not only emissaries of helpfulness but entertaining as well.

* * * *

It is this department's personal forecast that the Testimonial Program, under the sponsorship of a committee of distinguished citizens who are also staunch friends of the theater, will furnish an astonishing revelation of capabilities on the part of the National Theater Players that their routine duties in assigned roles never would permit the public otherwise to discover. It has been my observation that every successful actor "has something" of which the public never becomes apprised, except under some such unusual circumstances as will prevail a week from tonight.

* * * *

THERE should be a heartening quality in the announcements of the screen diversion available to the faithful during the week that is now upon us. Those who have lamented the absence of old names and old faces from the more modern of the magic lantern shows should derive a grain of comfort from the casts now on view.

At the Earle, for example, Miss Ruth Chatterton, appearing in the first of her stellar roles under the aegis of the Warner Brothers, is said to present a facet of her art with which the public has not hitherto been familiar. Added zest is lent the promise of her supremacy by glowing accounts of the many irresistible attributes possessed by a newcomer among the males who acts as her leading man.

Hard on the heels of the Washington premiere of Paramount's audible version of "The Miracle Man," comes Thomas Meighan, whose stellar career was launched by the excellence of his performance as "Doc" Morgan in the silent version of that classic, to the Fox, where, in copartnership with Charlotte Greenwood, he indulges in the engaging pastimes of "Cheaters at Play."

Not to be outdone, Fifteenth street heralds the reappearance in an important role of Conway Tearle, his difficulties with the moguls with a penchant for personal boycotts having been smoothed out, opposite Myrna Loy in a modernized version of William Makepiece Thackeray's "Vanity Fair," to which, as an earnest of its modernity, a titular "of Today" has been appended.

* * * *

What with "The Doomed Battalion" and "Night Court" continuing through second weeks at the Rialto and Columbia, respectively, the present can not be looked upon as a "slim" week, even if it does not partake of the historical significance of the seven-day period to be ushered in on Friday, the 13th, a day whose sinister reputation as an infallible hoodoo seems about to be permanently blasted.

Reichers and Elinor Smith Among Few Planning Ocean Flights This Year

Newark-to-Paris Crossing May Give Pay Load Practical Test.

Gatty Declares Regular Trips Depend on Work Done Aground.

(Associated Press.)

Spring's aviation calendar, so far not crowded by plans for spectacular ocean flights, finds the month of May marked for its first ambitious ventures.

Elinor Smith.

Nevertheless, with the fifth anniversary of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh's epochal solo flight to Paris approaching, the year 1932 gives no indication of equaling last year's activity, greatest since 1927.

So far the list of those preparing for Atlantic attempts includes Lou Reichers, of Arlington, N. J., and Elinor Smith, well known aviatrix

Reichers plans to test the practicability of an airplane express-messenger service in a flight from Newark to Paris with refueling stops at Newfoundland and Ireland.

A plane, mysteriously named "Mrs. Question Mark," was reported Miss Smith's choice for her intended hop to Europe.

Harold Gatty, cohero with Wiley Post in last year's record flight around the world in 8 days 15 hours and 51 minutes, holds that there is "nothing to look forward to in ocean flying but the practical work of carrying pay loads."

This, says Gatty, means study of routes, equipment and bases. He looks for aerial transportation to benefit greatly from such conferences as that called by the Royal Aero Club of Italy May 22-30 and which he and other American fliers will attend.

Harold Gatty.

"Personally, I don't see anything to stop transoceanic flights on regular schedules," he contends. "Routes are feasible, either to the far north or to the south by way of Bermuda and the Azores.

"The big hazard in ocean hopping is not in blind flying over great stretches of water, but in weather conditions at one's landing place.

"If Wiley and I were to go again we wouldn't care what the weather was over the ocean; we'd only want to know what it was on the other side.

"It is going to be very hard to pick a flight this year that would capture the interest of the people."

The one field in which Gatty expects there may be activity in 1932 is in ocean flying by women, since in that field there still remains a "first" to be registered.

Lou Reichers, shown here with his plane, plans a flight from Newark to Paris this month, with stops at Newfoundland and Ireland to refuel. Back of his flight is the idea of testing the practicability of express-messenger service between America and Europe.

National Guard Notes

Under auspices of Maj. Gen. Anton Stephan, commanding the District of Columbia National Guard, the officers of the District of Columbia National Guard tendered a testimonial dinner to Maj. Edward H. Grove Wednesday.

Pursuant to his own request, Maj. Grove was transferred to the National Guard Reserve on April 1, 1932.

The officers expressed regret at Maj. Grove's giving up active duty and in turn Maj. Grove expressed regret for the necessity which caused him to go on inactive status. He expressed continued interest in the organization and its welfare.

Gen. Stephan spoke in highest terms of services which Maj. Grove has rendered the local National Guard from a time shortly following the Spanish-American War until he resigned as captain of Company C, First Infantry, in July, 1905, then reentering the service in 1918 during the World War and assisting in the reorganization of the District of Columbia National Guard.

Private Aldorous J. Tidd, Medical Department Detachment, 260th Coast Artillery Detachment, District of Columbia National Guard, will be honorably discharged from the Guard on account of removal from the District.

Private Malcolm M. Allen and Private Elmer T. Perry, of Battery B, 260th Coast Artillery, of the District Guard, have been transferred to the Guard Reserves on account of temporary removal from the District. They have been assigned to Battery B, 260th Coast Artillery.

Privates Paul W. Christensen, Samuel H. R. Manchester and John H. Rankin, jr., of the Headquarters and Service Company of the 121st Engineers, have been transferred to the National Guard Reserves on account of business interference with performance of duties.

Sergt. Charles R. McArthur, of the National Guard Reserves, assigned to Battery E, 260th Coast Artillery, District Guard, has been honorably discharged from the Guard as he is now a member of the Metropolitan Police Force.

On the recommendation of the company commander of Company F, 121st Engineers, Private George M. Hoffman has been promoted to the grade of corporal.

Idaho Engineer Back From 2 Years in Russia

Boise, Idaho (U.P.).—To return from Russia to the United States is like stepping from darkness into light, according to Willard L. Gorton, reclamation engineer, of Boise.

Gorton has just returned from Russia, after spending two years at Tashkent, Turkestan, where he helped build a million-acre reclamation project.

Outstanding characteristics of Russian life today, as he saw it, are inefficiency, depression, high food prices and low wages.

Gorton said that Russian technical men were poorly treated. The fact that their knowledge was acquired during the monarchist régime tended to place them on an uncertain footing with the Communists.

Take-Offs and Landings

By HARRIS B. HULL

SINCE the very beginning of aviation the engineers and builders of airplanes have studied the possibility of using a steam engine as a source of power. Long before the Wright brothers ever flew Hiram Maxim designed and started construction on a huge, steam-powered plane. His inventive genius was diverted, however, to other channels, and he did not complete the work on the steam airplane. In 1895 Langley used steam to propel his models.

Since those pioneering days the subject of steam as a power plant for airplanes has come up at regular intervals, but nothing very tangible has been developed.

At the present time, however, the Great Lakes Aircraft Corporation, of Cleveland, under the direction of Capt. H. C. Richardson, is actively engaged in the development of a steam engine for airplane use. This company is known throughout the country and its entrance into this field is of importance.

The plant on which Great Lakes is working represents the combined efforts of a group of outstanding manufacturers of the component parts employed in a steam power unit. Their combined practical and consulting engineering staff have gone thoroughly into the problem and it is reported from a very good source that, "a most efficient unit has been developed based on known and tried steam practice, light in weight, low in fuel consumption, simple in construction, and with very few working parts."

The engine on which Great Lakes is working is expected to develop 2,350 horsepower. It embodies the most recent advances that have been made in steam generators, turbines, together with the use of new alloy metals. The unit is so small that it should be possible to house it within a small space. Steam will be condensed in a tube type radiator in the wing and will be returned for reconsumption with only slight loss.

Among the outstanding advantages advanced for the use of steam power in airplanes is that it should remove practically all of the vibration and noise of the internal combustion engine as now used. The reliability of a steam engine needs little comment. Radio communication would be greatly facilitated as ignition disturbances would be automatically removed. The heating of cabins would be facilitated and the power unit of a large ship could be completely handled in two engines rather than in four or more. Starting difficulties would be done away with as the propeller would turn over at a very low pressure.

The main disadvantages of steam power would be: The heavy weight per horsepower of the steam unit, the gyroscopic action of the steam turbine and the fact that it would be necessary to gear down the motor considerably from the high speed at which a turbine must turn.

The use of steam power, especially in larger planes, has definite advantages and is a fertile field for development of which we may expect to hear more later.

WHAT has become of the power glider or very light low horsepower craft over which there was so much ado several years ago? Most experienced pilots have belittled the value of these light jobs for training purposes and any other use except playing around the home airport inexpensively and with comparative safety for a pilot of considerable experience. It has taken a Cuban, Capt. Eduardo Laborde, of the Cuban Military Air Force, to belie the self-appointed experts. Clippings from a Havana newspaper which have reached this desk tell of his flight which started on April 20 from Havana and ended up a few days later within 100 miles of his destination, Mexico City, a distance of about 1,000 miles, in 14 hours' flying time. The captain made three landings on the route, which necessitated a 100-mile water crossing from Cuba to the Yucatan Peninsula. The plane ran out of gas after crossing the divide near Mexico City, which separates Vera Cruz from the Mexican capital. The captain's little Aeronca was wrecked, but not beyond repair. Capt. Laborde plans to continue his flight, including, on the return trip, a stop at Guatemala City.

FEW persons realize, even those intimately connected with local aviation, that the scholarly Stanley Crosthwait, administrative assistant of the Commerce Department's aeronautics branch, is an accomplished airplane pilot. Stan, who is Col. Clarence M. Young's right-hand man when it comes to fiscal matters, the passing of vouchers for personnel, equipment, &c., took his first lessons in flying in a Waco, at the old Washington Airport shortly after the aeronautics branch was first organized in 1926. He has since built up enough hours in the air to qualify for a transport license. Thus the aeronautics branch inspectors in the field have a sympathetic channel through which to pour their tales of woe when it comes to matters coming under the jurisdiction of Comptroller General McCarl.

THE Naval Air Station at Anacostia has received one of the small Curtiss airship fighters designed for landings aboard the Akron by hooking on to the dirigible's trapeze. The tiny plane, designated F9C-2, is a small, single-seated fighter, powered with a Wright 400-horsepower engine. It is here for trial board tests and has attracted considerable attention since its arrival.

Reserve Corps Notes

(By Staff Sergt. A. S. DE AGRO).

The 320th Infantry Regiment of Washington and associated Infantry Reserve officers will hold a dance in honor of three regular Army officers of the headquarters Washington units, organized reserves, on Friday, May 13. The officers, Col. Melville S. Jarvis, the senior instructor, and Majs. William A. Jones and Andres Lopez, instructors of infantry, will complete their tour of duty here before the summer. The dance will be given at the Army and Navy Country Club, near Arlington, Va. Lieut. Col. Albert L. Barrows, infantry reserve, of the National Research Council, 2101 Constitution avenue northwest, is in charge of the arrangements committee.

All officers sending in subscriptions should be sure to submit the name of partner and all those who wish to attend the dance in order for the committee to comply with the requirements of the club.

Col. Jarvis, who has been the senior instructor of the Washington units since July 22, 1928, will retire from the service some time before the end of June. He will be replaced by Col. William M. McCammon, infantry, on duty with the Sixteenth Infantry at Fort Jay, N. Y. Col. McCammon is not expected to assume duty as senior instructor until on or about September 15.

Maj. Jones, who has been in actual charge of the affairs of the 320th Infantry, will be transferred to the Organized Reserve under the Seventy-ninth Division, at Reading, Pa. He will be replaced by Maj. Turner M. Chambliss, general staff corps (infantry), who is at present on a tour of foreign service.

Maj. Lopez, who has been the adjutant at reserve headquarters in addition to his other duties as instructor of infantry, will be relieved during the latter part of June. He will be replaced by Maj. Elmore B. Gray, Coast Artillery Corps (DOL), who is now on duty at Richmond, Va. Maj. Gray is expected to report here June 29.

The regimental staff of the 320th Infantry consists of the following Washington officers: Lieut. Col. W. A. England, commanding; Lieut. Col. J. V. Richards, second in command and executive officer; Maj. Robert H. Stevenson, plans and training officer; Capt. George C. Whiting, S-1, adjutant; Capt. Harry M. Jett, S-2, intelligence officer; Capt. Lloyd E. Kelly, S-3, assistant plans and training officer; Capt. Ray K. Smathers, S-4, supply officer and First. Lieut. Frank A. Gould, munitions officer.

Twelve conferences will be held at local headquarters during the coming week for eight different branches of the service. Tomorrow evening the Chemical Warfare Service and the Quartermaster Corps will meet at 8 o'clock. Maj. Gen. Harry L. Gilchrist, chief of the Chemical Warfare Service, will lecture the reserve officers of that branch. His subject will be on "Some popular misconceptions concerning chemical warfare, and what will be the possibility of using chemicals in wars of the future." The quartermaster conference will be conducted by Capt. F. V. Fitzgerald, of the Quartermaster General's Office, who will lecture on "Genghis Kahn."

On Tuesday evening, the Coast Artillery Officers will hold their group school conference in the main assembly room at reserve headquarters. Maj. Walter H. Franks, Air Corps, will conduct the conference on "Aerial Tactics." The same evening the Air Corps officers will hold their monthly conference in the projection room in the office of the chief of Air Corps, Munitions Building. The subject will be "Attack Aviation" to be presented by Capt. Charles P. Prime, Air Corps.

The 313th and 315th Field Artillery Regiments will meet on Wednesday evening. "Map Reading" will be the subject to be taken up by Maj. John M. McDowell, field artillery instructor. Lieut. Col. W. E. Shedd, General Staff Corps, will conduct the military intelligence conference on the same evening. He will give a resume of instruction conducted during the school year.

On Thursday evening the ordnance officers will hold their last conference of the school year. Capt. J. W. Walters, Ordnance Department, assistant ordnance officer, Third Corps Area, will conduct the conference on "Ordnance With the Division." The finance officers will meet in the finance school classroom on the same evening. F. G. Gardiner, assistant to the chief of finance, will lecture on "Accounting," and Lieut. J. G. Dobble, financial reserve, will define "Legal Status of Disbursing Officers."

It is believed that the revision on the Army extension courses will increase the efficiency of the Reserve Corps more than any other change that has been accomplished lately.

In the first place, all courses have been revised so as to bring them up to date and also to present the subject matter much more satisfactorily. The maximum use has been made of special tests which present the material for study in a logical and concise manner. The second place, every subcourse is required for promotion to some grade, and every subject required for promotion has a corresponding subcourse. Since the extension courses are primarily to prepare officers as far as practicable for their war-time duties and to assist them to meet the requirements for promotion, regulations state that normally officers should be enrolled in the series pertaining to the next higher grade. Thus a second lieutenant should enroll for the 20 series, a first lieutenant in the 30 series, &c. As an exception, any officer who has already qualified for his next promotion, either by having been granted a certificate of capacity or having earned 300 hours of credits within five years of the date he will be eligible for promotion and prior to October 1, 1930, should take the next higher series. Thus a second lieutenant who has been issued a certificate of capacity for promotion to the grade of first lieutenant should enroll for the 30 series, in order to qualify himself for promotion to the grade of captain. This is, because, having earned his certificate for promotion to first lieutenant, he has already demonstrated his proficiency in the subjects comprising the 20 series. Officers who have completed an equivalent subcourse under the 1930-31 or earlier designation will not be required to take the corresponding 1931-32 subcourse. The completion of any subcourse, or in case of an exemption, the completion of the training on which the exemption is based, will be accepted by examining boards in lieu of the corresponding examination only if such completion occurred within five years of date of application for examination for a certificate of capacity, or within the minimum period which the officer must serve in grade if this period is greater than five years. An officer who applies for examination for certificate of capacity in June, 1932, may claim exemption for those subcourses only which he completed since June, 1927. However, a major may count back to his original appointment in that grade if this period is not more than six years, and a lieutenant colonel may count back to his original appointment to that grade if not more than seven years. An R. O. T. C. or C. M. T. C. graduate, to get exemptions, must apply for exemption within five years of date of graduation.

The following officers have been tendered reappointments in the Officers' Reserve Corps: As second lieutenants, Corps of Engineers, Franklin Rice Gossett, of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Jean Carr Browner, of Indianhead, Md.; as second lieutenants, Infantry Reserve, James G. Gray, jr., of Riverdale, Md.; Wade Hampton Elgin, jr., of 3529 Porter street northwest, and Philip Augustus Hamigan, jr., of 2920 Ontario road northwest. Second Lieut. Ralph Arthur Hammer, of 1506 Twenty-first street northwest, has been reappointed to that grade in the Signal Corps Reserve.

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS.

Defense Post.

The District of Columbia Department Council of Administration, at its meeting last Monday night, accepted the invitation extended by the Brookland-Woodridge Business Association to hold the 1932 department convention in the Northeast community. The opening session of the encampment is to be held on June 8 in the auditorium of the John Burroughs School, and the sessions of the last two days of June 9 and 10 will be held in the Northeast Masonic Hall, Rhode Island and Mills avenues northeast.

A mammoth parade will be staged on the first day, under arrangements jointly perfected by the special committee of the department of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, in conjunction with the civic organizations of the community. The line of march will be through the business districts of Brookland and Woodridge. Defense Post considers it a distinctive honor conferred by the department to have the encampment convene in its territory during the first year of the post's organization. Programmed plans are progressing under the direction of the Brookland-Woodridge Business Association, the post and the department for the approaching convention. The post will hold an open meeting on Wednesday night and the wives of all comrades are invited. The regular order of business will be dispensed with, so that all may enjoy the uninterrupted hour of social contacts. Refreshments will be served.

General Frederick Dent Grant Post.

Commander Charles Newell presided at the meeting of Frederick Dent Grant Post Wednesday at the Metropolitan Hotel. The post decided to modify its name to include the designation of the post's namesake, and hereafter will be known officially as The General Frederick Dent Grant Post. The post colors will be dedicated at the auditorium of the Interior Department, on May 25, and Lieut. Col. U. S. Grant 3d, will present the colors and preside at the dedicatory ceremonies.

Chief of Staff Maj. Edgar H. Hale, in an address to the membership of the post, solicited the support of the delegation at the approaching department encampment.

The following candidates were elected to membership: Carlton Davis, J. F. Shaver and M. P. Rolando. Frank A. Stripin was initiated by the short form ritual. The post is sponsoring a weekly broadcast over WJSV beginning next Thursday from 8 to 8:30 p. m.

National Capital Post and Ladies Auxiliary.

At the last meeting of National Capital Post, held in the Pythian Temple, on April 26, the following comrades were obligated to membership: Benny Stolman, Troop K, Fifth Cavalry, A. E. F.; Thomas M. Cahill, Fifty-fifth Company, C. A. C., A. E. F.; Richard R. Ragsdale, Company M, Twenty-sixth Infantry, A. E. F.; Benjamin Baker Sawyer, Company B, Fifty-sixth Pioneer Infantry, A. E. F., and the following recruits were elected and will be obligated to membership on May 9: Charles C. Rector, J. H. Williams, Edgar H. Taber and Clarence S. Smith. A historic altar flag, donated by Mrs. Margaret Jacobson, widow of Past Department Commander Jacobson, was formally presented and dedicated, and Commander Clauddis L. Burton delivered the acceptance speech. Adresses were made by Senior Vice Department Commander Herbert C. Davis, Department Adjutant Edward F. Clark and Commander Harry F. Volkman, of Front Line Post.

The Ladies Auxiliary entertained the comrade-patients of Mount Alto Hospital on April 27. Bingo was played and prizes were awarded to winners. Refreshments were served.

Front Line Post.

With full military honors the late Comrade William G. O'Dwyer, who passed away on April 30, was buried in Arlington National Cemetery on May 3. Officers and members of the post exemplified the full V. F. W. ritualistic ceremonies during the interment. A large class of recruits will be obligated tomorrow night in the Junior Order Hall, 808 I street northwest. Several members of the post attended the coronation of the Apple Blossom Festival queen at Winchester, Va. The post announces with considerable pride that its council members of the D. C. department have attained a 98 per cent attendance record at meetings of the council during the term now closing. Front Line Post also maintains its distinction of having the largest numerical strength of membership in the department, and its members are making a concerted effort to live up to the post's slogan of "each member bring in a new member during 1932." Plans are being made for the formation of a baseball team to represent the post, and its bowling team finished the season with an enviable record, having lost but two matches during the bowling season. Credit may well be given to the team's captain, Dr. A. Victor Cercell, whose untiring efforts, enthusiasm and leadership were largely instrumental in achieving the conspicuous distinction.

Front Line Ladies Auxiliary.

The last regular meeting was held on April 25 at Soliers, Sailors and Marines Club. The application of Mrs. Grace Davis was received, and will be balloted upon at tomorrow night's meeting. On April 27 a very successful dance was given for the benefit of the patients of Naval Hospital, and plans are made for another dance to be held on an early date. All members are urged to be present at the stated meeting of tomorrow night for consideration of the organization of a District of Columbia department of the ladies auxiliary.

Advance Post.

In the Apple Blossom Festival at Winchester, Va., the post's colors were carried by a special guard under command of Comrade-Bandsman Irving Silverberg, along the "Trail of the Pink Petals." Quartermaster Morgan announces that a new consignment of overseas caps has arrived from national headquarters, Kansas City, Mo., and are now ready for issuance. The available stock will supply almost all the members with the regulation V. F. W. cap. To facilitate the dispatch of Mother's Day messages on Thursday, the post's representatives made a liberal distribution of postage stamps and stationery among the hospitalized patients of Ward 31 of Walter Reed Hospital.

DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS.

At its last meeting Richard O. Melton was sworn in as department senior vice commander of the Disabled American Veterans. At the previous meeting of the executive committee "Dck" Melton was elected by a unanimous vote.

Department Junior Vice Commander Ralph Werner returned from Atlantic City Sunday, where he has been recuperating for several weeks.

The District of Columbia Department has been invited to participate in the annual Mother's Day services, which will be held this afternoon at 2 o'clock in the Arlington Amphitheater, under auspices of the American War Mothers. After services in the amphitheater there will be a ceremony at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier. Those wishing seats for the ceremony may apply to Mrs. M. C. O'Neill, 313 V street northwest.

The welfare committee, composed of Department Commander Dr. Lee Turner, Senior Vice Commander Richard Melton, Junior Vice Commander Ralph Werner, Treasurer Jack Speers, Rehabilitation Officer Earl Hendrick and Welfare Director George Phillips, met in room 228, Transportation Building, on Monday afternoon. The purpose of this meeting was to devise ways and means of meeting the present crisis. It was decided that, regardless of any prior investigations, a new check-up be made, with special emphasis put upon the possible chance of there being any way that the number of family cases could be cut down through employment or any possible change in status.

Ace-Rasmusson Chapter.

Commander Joseph Ashi called a meeting of the membership committee of Ace-Rasmusson Chapter Friday evening to map out a new campaign. The after San Diego celebration is already planned for some time in July.

National Capital Chapter.

An entertainment is being planned to initiate and welcome new recruits secured through the membership drive of the National Capital Chapter.

Rea Chapter.

An old-time dance and "hoedown" was held at Leesburg, Va., for the members of the chapter on last Friday night.

Rea Chapter Auxiliary.

The Rea Chapter Auxiliary met last Friday at the Knights of Pythias Hall. Mrs. Earle presided as commander. Delegates and alternates to the national convention in San Diego were elected as follows: Delegates, Mrs. Earle, Mrs. Moore, Mrs. Murray; alternates, Mrs. Schroyer and Mrs. Zitts. Mrs. William Holt represents the chapter on the G. A. R. Memorial Day general committee.

Federal Chapter.

Last Wednesday evening from 7 to 8 o'clock a joint program with the Atterbury Chapter by the Federal Chapter was broadcast over Station WJSV. Commander Helen O'Neill, of the Atterbury Chapter, arranged the program and read National Legislative Chairman Capt. Thomas Kirby's speech before the House committee on veterans' affairs. Capt. Kirby was unable to be present on account of illness.

National Commander E. Claude Babcock spoke on the D. A. V. employment service and outlined the legislative and rehabilitation work of the organization. Past Department Commander L. Harold Sothoron spoke on legislation and announced the testimonial meeting for the national commander that will be held in the Department of Interior Auditorium on Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock. The speakers at this meeting will be Gen. Frank T. Hines, Representative Fuller, of Arkansas; Representatve Swing, of California, and John Alpine, of the Department of Labor.

Commander Lloyd Wymer, of the Federal Chapter, spoke about the help that disabled veterans had received from National Commander Babcock. Comrade McGinnis, of the Atterbury Chapter, spoke on the bonus.

SONS OF CONFEDERATE VETERANS

The Sons of Confederate Veterans, Camp 305, will hold its regular monthly meeting this Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock at its headquarters, 1322 Vermont avenue northwest. The camp will give a card party some time during the month of June along with Camp No. 171. Comrade W. F. Swearingen is arranging details for this event.

It is planned to participate in the Flag Day exercises of June 14 together with the Confederate Veterans. A float may be entered in the parade.

The membership committee, composed of Benjamin Grady, secretary; Edward S. Byrnes, treasurer, and W. F. Swearingen, report that the applications for membership are growing.

The ball committee members will make their reports on Tuesday evening.

UNITED SPANISH WAR VETERANS.

The meeting held on Monday at the United States Soldiers Home of Col. John Jacob Astor Camp, was convened at 7 o'clock p. m., Commander Lewis H. Forsyth presiding. As a tribute to the late Comrade James J. Powers, the usual period of silent prayer was observed. There were many visiting comrades present, who were called upon by the commander and responded with remarks. Many of the members of Astor Camp also addressed the meeting.

The members of Astor Camp are expected to turn out in full force for the Memorial Day parade, to be held on the morning of May 30.

Gen. Lawton Camp.

Commander Richard L. Lamb presided at the regular monthly meeting of Gen. Henry W. Lawton Camp, held in Pythian Temple on Monday, at which time several new members were added to the roster. The meeting was well attended, there being present members from the various camps of this department. The camp was host to the Lawton Auxiliary, who received a cordial welcome by Commander Lamb on behalf of the camp. The auxiliary delegation was led by President Cordelia Pollard, the officers and many of the members. President Pollard and Past President Lynch spoke, thanking the members of the camp for their cooperation in the past and for the invitation to be present at this meeting. James J. Yaden spoke at considerable length concerning pending legislation now being considered by Congress. Past Department President Bertha R. Cook and other members of Lawton Auxiliary also spoke and congratulated the camp for the work it had done for the auxiliary. At the conclusion of the meeting refreshments were served by the entertainment committee and each woman presented with a bouquet of flowers. The members of the camp were also given bouquets for their wives who were not able to be present at the meeting.

Dewey Naval Camp.

The Married Life of Helen and Warren

The Glamor of Venice Gloomed by a Cafe Casualty

By MABEL HERBERT URNER

"GREATEST square in Europe!" Warren flourished his cane with rare enthusiasm. "I'd forgotten how fine it is."

"And just the same!" Helen's reminiscent glance swept toward the historic piazza.

"Expect St. Mark's to change in three years? Hasn't in three centuries. Same cafes, too. Come, on, we'll park at Florian's and have an ice."

Soon at one of the small tables under the orange awning.

An eager survey of the vast piazza. At one end, the gold-domed Basilica. The old arcaded palaces around the other three sides.

Yes, everything the same. The same vivid unreality. Even the same flutter of pigeons in the sculptured arches.

And that peculiar hush of Venice. No wheeled-traffic roar. Only gondolas slipping silently through water streets.

Pleasant relaxation after the long train trip. Arrived an hour ago. Quickly settled at the hotel, a cooling bath—now out for a perfect evening.

"Dear, when you left the key at the desk—didn't you get some letters?"

"Jove, that's right," exploring his pocket. "One for you—from Carrie."

Deciphering her sister-in-law's scrawl. Four pages of domestic detail. A new maid, a country club feud, the garage repainted——

Home Seems Remote.

How remote and trivial it all seemed—here in glamorous Venice!

"Long letter from Trent. Wants me to look up some firms in Vienna. Have to cable him just when we'll be there."

"Here's Carrie's letter," handing it to him. "A postcript for you."

His swift scanning of the remaining mail until the waiter brought their ices.

"This ought to cool us off. Golly, it's a poisonous pink."

"Raspberry. Oh, dear, this table's so wobbly——"

"Well, want to move to the next?"

"No, no, this one has a rung," the iron brace providing her always-desired footstool. "Can't you steady it with something?"

"Guess this'll do." Folding Carrie's envelope, he wedged it under the leg.

Half-hour chimes from the soaring Campanile. The pigeons startled into a whirring iridescent flight.

"You'd think they'd get used to those bells. Pretty dumb!"

"But they're lovely and so tame. I must get them some corn."

Darting over to the shabby vender for a lira cornucopia. The alert pigeons flocking around as she scattered the grain.

"Way every one stuffs those birds, wonder they can fly. Feeding the pigeons at St. Mark's—of all the tourist stunts! Have your picture taken next."

"Why not?" her laughing defiance. "Here's my camera. Wait till they settle——. Quick, get this one on my shoulder!"

Enjoy Lazy Gondola Ride.

Still scoffing, he snapped the shutter.

"Huh, those greedy beggars—off for another handout. Nothing doing. you don't register me in that sappy pose!"

A languid half-hour watching the colorful crowd. Sailors, soldiers, nuns, And the rapt guidebook tourists.

"Dear, isn't it restful here? No trolleys or taxis——"

"And no horses for you to anguish over. Hello, lamp that—across the square!"

Above the ancient clock tower, two bronze statues hammered the great bell.

"Quarter past 5. Come on, we want to take a ride before dinner."

Starting off under the arcades. The street floor of the old palaces now all shops. Venetian laces, shawls, frail Murano glass and an oversupply of beads.

Into the Piazzetta. Past the regal Doges' Palace to the boat landing.

Rows of gondolas like somnolent black swans. A red-sashed boatman chosen from the soliciting horde.

Stepping into the lazy comfort of the cushioned seat. A gurgling plash, and they glided off down the Grand Canal—the main street of Venice.

Ancient Gothic palaces rising sheer from the water. Mooring poles before the half-submerged doorsteps.

The past grandeur of the marble facades. Columned arched windows and massive bronze doors. Now a melancholy neglect. Many of the great houses closed, or degenerated to hotels and shops.

"Dear, this all seems so unreal! Like an enchanted city—asleep for ages."

"There's a discordant note," as an arrogant motorboat shot by. "Ought to keep those darned things out of Venice."

"They did try," Helen trailing his cane in the water. "A society of artists sent a petition to Mussolini——"

"Palazzo Rezzonico," intruded the gondolier, gracefully erect in the stern. "Roberto Browning, he die there."

Undiscouraged by their silence, he monologued his guide-book lore.

"These-a very old palazzo—year fourteen hundred. Signor Byron he live there."

"Huh, Byron seems to have struck every town in Italy! Here, give me my stick before you drown it."

"Dear, we know it along here. Can't we turn off and explore the back ways?"

At Warren's order, they swerved into a side "rio." Skirting a mossy wall as a load of tomatoes glided by.

Their gondolier skillfully threading the network of narrow canyons. Often pushing with his hand against the green-molded stones.

Under low-arched bridges. Around corners with eerie warning cries. The passing gondolas perilously close—but never a collision.

Recalls First Venetian Trip.

The water sinisterly black and still. A smell of damp decay. Plaster scaling from the sagging houses. Once-proud palazzos with laundry-draped balconies.

A sudden splash ahead—A melon rind bobbing to the surface!

"Great guns, almost landed on us!" snorted Warren. "Now we're not joyriding where they pitch the garbage out the window."

Soon back on the wide expance of the Grand Canal. The assiduous gondolier pointing out the Rialto Bridge with its fringing shops.

"Dear, remember our first trip here?" mused Helen. "That wonderful night in the gondola. I wanted to purr over you—and you were so horrid and unresponsive."

"Well, I can't get sentimental to order," his cigarette hissed on the water. "Not even when the backdrop's Venice by moonlight."

"I know, I wouldn't expect it now. But I did then. I'll never forget that night—Oh, you're not even listening!"

"Eh? Just doping out when we get to Vienna. Want to cable Trent tonight," taking the letters from his pocket. "He said something about that——"

From the typewritten envelope, shaking out——

That back-hand scrawl—Carrie's letter!

"Got 'em mixed. Where's her envelope? Must've slipped Trent's letter in that."

"Oh, you didn't?" panicky. "That's the one you put under the table leg!"

"The devil I did!" hastily examining the other letters. "Jove, that's right!"

Vehement gestured orders to the gondolier.

"Back to San Marco—presto! Let's see you make some speed with this tub."

"Si, si, signor," a flash of teeth under the villainous black hat.

"Dear, of course it'll be there. Just a wedge—no one would bother——"

"Hope not," grimly. "Darned awkward if that's gone. Have to hang around waiting for cables—upset our whole schedule."

At the prodding "Presto, presto," the gondolier poling with swifter strokes.

The Piazzetta landing at last. Paying for the full time. Paying a lira to the old man who helped Helen up the oozy steps.

The pink-and-white marble of the Doges' Palace, dazzling in the Turner sunset. But Warren unheedingly stalking on to the piazza.

Now, in the lengthened shadows, tables before all the cafes. And all taken. The added festivity of a string orchestra.

"How can we find that table in this mob?" he fumed, when they reached Florian's. "Second outside row, wasn't it? Where those officers are?"

"No, the next—with the rung. Oh, those people look English——"

Helen Is Blamed for Loss.

An elderly couple drinking heat-braving tea. Obligingly pushing back their chairs.

But no envelope wedge!

"Oh, I'm sure this is the table!" persisted Helen. "It's still wobbling. And the only one with a rung—why I didn't want to change."

"That's why my letter's lost!" savagely. "Always have to park your feet! Why in blazes don't you carry a collapsible footstool?"

"Warren, not so loud—please!" shrinking from the curious glances.

"Now I'll have to cable I've lost the letter. Feel like a fool!" his explosion unchecked. "All because of your infernal footstool mania——"

"There's our waiter—ask him!" her crimson mortification.

"Something is wrong, signor?" the waiter hurried up.

"I've lost a letter. Wedged it under that table leg. Seen anything of it?"

"A letter? Si, si, signor," digging into his pocket.

Yes, the crumpled envelope.

"That's it!" snatching out a typed sheet. "Darned glad you saved i."

"The American stamp—I take it for my boy. I do not know you want it."

"I don't—not that," returning the envelope with a tip. "What a break!"

Oblivious of her unresponsive silence, he forged ahead through the maze of tables.

"That's what I call luck!" swaggering relief as they turned into the shop-glittered arcade. "Well, let's get back to the hotel and wash up for dinner. Not too early, is it?"

Tiff Ends Abruptly.

Still hurt silence. Her blurred gaze on the callously gay piazza.

"Eh?" at last conscious of her chill withdrawal. "What's eating you?"

"You needn't have roared out at me!" quiveringly. "With everyone listening——You don't know how loud you talk!"

"What of it? Only a bunch of strangers. Fine shops along here," a subject-shifting bait. "You're keen on old lace—see anything you want? Rather sulk, eh?"

"I'm not sulking! But I don't care to be shouted at—especially in public. And it's not the first time," an accumulative grievance. "Whenever you——"

"Now forget it! Let's not crab our one evening in Venice. How about another gondola jaunt after dinner?"

Then, with an atoning grin, drawing her arm through his.

"Going to be a full moon, Kitten—just like that first night. You can purr all you want. And maybe I'll work up a little slushy sentiment!"

Next week—A Strategic Murder.

D. A. R. CHAPTER ACTIVITIES

Sarah Franklin

Sarah Franklin Chapter, D. A. R., held its regular monthly meeting on the afternoon of April 27 at the home of Mrs. George Starfield in Rosemont, Va.

Miss Belle Browning, regent, opened the meeting with prayer and the usual salute to the flag.

Four of the officers were absent, and their reports were very much missed. Mrs. Hoffheins, who was absent, sent in her report on "Better Films," stating that she was present at the showing of the motion picture of "George and Martha Washington" at Mount Vernon, and could vouch for its excellence, and that it could be had by the District chapters upon application to the proper party.

Mrs. Mulcare reported that chapter house now has a building fund of $22,000, and is anxious to start building, but three-fourths of the whole amount should be on hand before starting the work.

A letter was read regarding Fanny Shiplet, whose education is sponsored by this chapter at the Blue Ridge Industrial School. Both letter and report spoke well of her efforts.

Sarah Franklin Chapter donated $5 in the name of Mrs. Robert Harrison, our honored historian, toward the bookplate, which the District chapters contemplate placing in their section of the library at Constitution Hall.

The regent, Miss Browning, read her report to the State conference, and it was heartily approved by the chapter. Also our delegate, Mrs. George Starfeld, read her report on the Congress, and was much enjoyed.

A pleasant social hour followed adjournment.

The annual election resulted in the following officers being elected for the ensuing year: Regent, Mrs. Frank Grosvenor; vice regent, Mrs. H. C. Gauss; chaplain, Mrs. Elizabeth Sloan; recording secretary, Miss S. L. Keene; corresponding secretary, Miss Lillian Langworthy; treasurer, Mrs. George Beckett; registrar, Miss Isabel Myrth; historian, Mrs. William H. Cole.

Mrs. Coombs presented a beautiful silver basket to Mrs. Suavely, from the chapter.

The May meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Palmer, 24 West Irving street, Chevy Chase, with her mother, Mrs. Barber, acting as hostess with her.

Columbia Chapter

Columbia Chapter, D. A. R., met April 26 with Mrs. H. C. Gauss, 1915 Calvert street, with the regent, Mrs. Suavely, presiding.

Announcement was made of the moonlight ride down the Potomac June 6, with Miss Nellie Grant Ross in charge of tickets.

Annual reports were made by the different State chairmen and other officers of the chapter. Five dollars was contributed to the library committee for a book plate for the library.

Judge Lynn

Judge Lynn Chapter, D. A. R., met on May 3, at the Battery Park Club House, the hostesses being Mrs. Myers, Mrs. Hanson, Miss Hacker, Miss Price and Misses Letitia and Margaret Walker. The regent, Mrs. J. Milton Jester, presided.

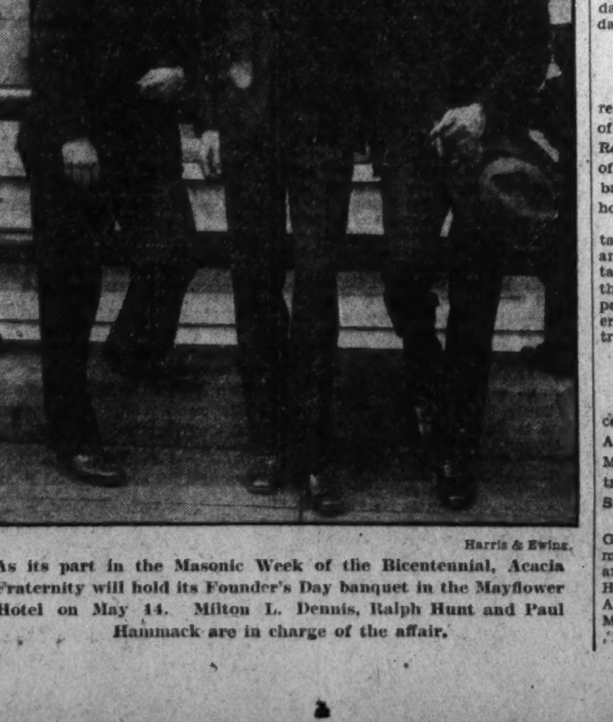
After the usual opening exercises and monthly reports of the officers, Mrs. Haig and Mrs. Robbins gave very interesting talks on the recent Continental Congress. Mrs. Snyder was unanimously elected to membership in the chapter.

Annual reports of officers and committee chairmen were read. The following officers were elected for the coming year: Regent, Mrs. Harry R. Fulton; vice regent, Mrs. Donald M. Earll; chaplain, Miss Gladys Sinclair; recording secretary, Mrs. C. S. Titus; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Estelle Lawrence; treasurer, Mrs. C. W. Kyle; historian, Miss Jean Warfield; registrar, Mrs. Robert J. Swingle, and delegate, Mrs. J. Milton Jester.

Mrs. Schermerhorn, chairman; Miss Warfield and Miss Price were appointed as a committee to make plans for marking the grave in Congressional Cemetery of Robert Mills, the architect who designed the Washington Monument and Monticello. Miss Reily, chairman; Mrs. Schermerhorn and Mrs. Haig were appointed a committee to arrange for a bridge luncheon in lieu of the June meeting.

After adjournment, a brief social hour was enjoyed.

ARRANGING ACACIA BANQUET



Harris & Ewing.

As its part in the Masonic Week of the Bicentennial, Acacia Fraternity will hold its Founder's Day banquet in the Mayflower Hotel on May 14. Milton L. Dennis, Ralph Hunt and Paul Hammack are in charge of the affair.

Dorothy Hancock

The May meeting of the Dorothy Hancock Chapter, N. S. D. A. R., was held at the home of Mrs. Louis B. Montfort. Assistant hostesses were Mrs. R. W. Geare and Mrs. John W. Townsend.

Mrs. Henry Harper, State director of the Children of the American Revolution, was an honor guest at luncheon, and gave a most interesting talk on the work of the organization.

The regent of the Dorothy Hancock Chapter, Mrs. Eliot E. Lovett, presided at the meeting, and in giving her report, thanked the chapter for its loyalty and cooperation during the past year.

The report of the delegate, Mrs. George Clarke Ober, jr., on the recent continental congress, was received with enthusiasm, and a rising vote of thanks given Mrs. Ober.

Mrs. B. H. Lingo, who was chairman of the flower concession for the benefit of the Chapter House of the District of Columbia at the recent continental congress, gave her report, which was most gratifying. A rising vote of thanks was given Mrs. Lingo for her splendid achievement.

Mrs. Rudolph T. Harrell was unanimously elected chapter delegate for the ensuing year.

The annual June holiday of the Dorothy Hancock Chapter is to take the form of a picnic on June 14 at the summer home of Mrs. Harrell, at Bay Ridge, Md.

Mrs. Robert F. Dyer was unanimously elected to membership in the chapter.

Eleanor Wilson

Eleanor Wilson Chapter met Tuesday at the home of the regent, Mrs. J. C. Courts, 1518 Thirty-first street. The regent presided. The annual report of the treasurer was presented. Following the reports of meetings of various State committees, the regent gave a resume of important facts of interest to the chapter from Continental Congress. Mrs. Arthur Watkins, a member of the chapter, gave a delightful and instructive talk on her activities in Parent-Teacher Association, showing how these problems might be applied to D. A. R. work. Each member brought a gift to be sent to the mountain school in North Carolina, where the chapter is supporting a student. The results were very gratifying.

The annual election of officers was held, and the following were elected: Regent, Mrs. James C. Courts; vice regent, Mrs. J. C. Clements; chaplain, Mrs. Walter Smith; recording secretary, Mrs. L. M. Fuller; corresponding secretary, Miss Evie Morris; treasurer, Mrs. Charles Grunwell; registrar, Mrs. William Ramsay; historian, Mrs. Guy Mason.

The chapter voted to change the date of meetings to the second Tuesday of each month.

'76 Chapter

Mrs. Constance Goodman, outgoing regent of Descendants of '76 Chapter, of the Daughters of the American Revolution, entertained the officers of the chapter at luncheon and bridge Wednesday, May 4, at her home on Thirty-fifth street.

Covers for twelve were laid on a table decorated with spring flowers and flags. This was a farewell entertainment for Mrs. Goodman, as after the chapter meeting May 10, she expects to leave the city for her Southern home and later will sail for a trip around the world.

Monticello Chapter

The annual luncheon of Monticello Chapter was held Thursday, April 28, at the Parrot Tea Room. Mrs. Hansmann, the retiring State treasurer, was presented with an ex-State treasurer's pin.

Curley Club Will Honor Archbishop

Capital Group Named After Baltimore Ecclesiastic to Dine Tomorrow.

The Most Rev. Michael J. Curley, Archbishop of Baltimore, will be the guest of honor at a testimonial banquet at the Willard Hotel tomorrow evening at 7:15 o'clock given under auspices of the Curley Club, celebrating the tenth anniversary of the founding of the organization.

The dinner will be preceded by a reception in the Fairfax room at 7 o'clock. This banquet, which is one of the outstanding features of the tenth anniversary, will be followed by dancing until 1 a. m. William J Boyd, chairman of the entertainment committee, will be toastmaster, and Miss Mary L. McGee, founder of the organization, will deliver a short history of the early days of the club.

The Curley Club was organized May 9, 1922, primarily for the purpose of raising funds for scholarships for poor children, and secondly, to encourage and promote the association of Catholic young women and men. The first gathering was held in the residnece of Miss Mary L. McGee, 300 East Capitol street, where about a dozen ladies and gentlemen assembled to devise ways and means of organizing the club. Nearly 200 members comprise the membership roster of the organization today, and during the past ten years the Curley Club has raised more funds for scholarships, per member, than any other organization in the Archdiocese of Baltimore. Recently three rooms were equipped in the new St. Mary's Seminary with funds raised by the members of the Curley Club. The organization bears the name of his excellency, the Most Rev. Archbishop Curley, who gave his approval and sanction to the organization several months after he was elevated to the Archbishopric of Baltimore, following the death of Cardinal Gibbons.

Miss Gretchen Baden and Miss Catherine Bowers will sing selections, accompanied by Miss Helen Herbeck. Miss Ann Arlen, accompanied by Miss Peggy Hurdle, will give a violin solo. Miss Helen Herbeck will give a recitation. Addresses will be delivered by Miss Mary L. McGee, the Rev. Francis X. Cavanagh, spiritual director of the club, and Roland J. Hyland, president. The Curley Club chorus will give several numbers, and an orchestra will play. Guests of the evening include Mgr. Eugene J. Connelly, pastor of St. Peter's Church; the Rev. Charles J. Dacey, pastor of St. Paul's Church; the Rev. Joseph Maccalester, of St. Dominic's Church, and the Rev. Joseph Sullivan, president of the Marist College, Brookland.

William J. Boyd, chairman of the tenth anniversary committee, will be assisted by Miss Dorothy Barrett, Miss Gretchen Baden, Miss Mary O'Connor, Miss Catherine O'Connor, Mr. Luke O'Reilly, Mr. John Townshend, Mr. Joseph Diegelmann, Mr. Francis McCann and Mr. Roland Hyland in carrying out the arrangements for the banquet, reception and dance.

The Catholic University Glee Club, under the direction of Dr. Leo Behrendt, will be guests of the Curley Club, following the regular meeting of the club next Thursday evening in the Continental Hotel. Following the concert, refreshments will be served, and dancing will follow until midnight.

The first annual May dance, entertainment and card party, to be held under auspices of the Curley Club, on last Monday evening in St. Paul's auditorium, Fifteenth and V streets northwest, was a success. There was bingo, horoscope reading and other features. An orchestra, under the direction of Prof. E. Cavalier, furnished music. Mrs. Edna Hillyard Howard, former soprano soloist of St. Patrick's Church, sang. Proceeds from the affair will be applied to the club's fund for scholarships.

The first hike of the spring will take place next Sunday afternoon when members of the organization will gather at Key Bridge in Georgetown for a five-mile walk up the towpath to Chain Bridge, where supper will be served. Charles Ziehl, chairman of the athletic committee, is in charge of arrangements.

Droshky Drivers To Lose "Profits"

Earnings of 1,400 Cabbies to Vanish Under Soviet Organization Decree.

Moscow (A.P.).—Droshky drivers, those picturesque patriarchal brigands of a vanishing generation who have lorded it over a small world of their own as the last stand of extensive private enterprise in Soviet Russia, soon are to lose their independence.

The Moscow Transport Union decreed today that the 1,400 drivers in the capital must be formed into organizations communal in type. Each will profit equally in the joint earnings and each must bear an equal share of the operating expenses.

Until now the old Muscovite cabbies, who have been an institution in Russia for generations, have profited handsomely by the inadequate transportation facilities of Moscow. They have demanded—and received—the most exorbitant fees from clients who had no time to wait for overcrowded tramcars or for the extremely scarce taxicabs. Under the decree the droshky drivers will be compelled to charge fixed rates.

NEWMAN WILL PRESENT LAST WORD IN HIKES

E. M. Newman, ace traveltalker, who is weaving his way around the world for our entertainment, sends us word from the Far East that he is coming to us next season with pictures and stories that are new and different from anything that has ever been shown.

"During the past 24 years," writes the skilled traveler, "I have visited and photographed every part of the habitable globe. In many instances I have revisited for the purpose of bringing back new scenes and experiences which are always to be found with the right kind of effort. This year, I am glad to say, my efforts have been doubly rewarded and I will present next season a pictorial record of world travel which will be in keeping with the highest and best traditions in Traveltalks."

This ideal journey "Around the World" is to be done in a leisurely manner, we are told. Instead of rushing madly from one seaport to another, missing the many things we have read about, we shall make excursions inland and really live among the people we found so attractive in books. This fascinating trip Mr. Newman will divide into five Traveltalks when he appears here next season.

Five-Year-Old Boy Leads 'Baby' Orchestra

Seattle (U.P.).—One of the youngest orchestras in America, led by a talented 5-year-old boy, has been formed here.

Ten children, ranging from 3 to 7 years of age, make up the group under direction of Ethen-Ann Reinig, formerly director of the Hollywood Baby Orchestra.

The children use violins one-eighth and one-quarter of the normal size. A small cello also is used.

Jackie Wroten, 5, conducts the orchestra, and Jackie Le May is master of ceremonies, making all announcements.

The orchestra is a noncommercial organization and appears regularly at charity benefits.

PATRONS LIST ANSWERS THAT FAMOUS QUERY

Shakespeare it was who asked, "What's in a name?"

S. E. Cochran, manager of the National Theater Players, though he has no direct answer for Shakespeare's question, believes that he possesses one of the proudest lists of names in Washington—and this is the roster of those who have been regular subscribers of the National Theater Players since they first started, eight years ago.

An idle reporter, having nothing else to do, asked to look at the list. He was permitted a glance at the big black book they keep in the box office at the National. Then, when he wanted to write down some of the names, he was warned to be careful—for you can not print all those names, and yet a cross-section of them shows that the National Theater Players have appeared on the boards before a veritable "Who's Who" in Washington.

Among the people who have seen the Players in action are three First Ladies of the Land: Mrs. William Howard Taft, Mrs. Woodrow Wilson and Mrs. Calvin Coolidge.

Mrs. E. B. McLean has seen the Players. So, too, have numerous society leaders. Of the regular playgoers, however, following are outstanding, week-after-week patrons of the National Theater Players, their names picked at random:

S. Fay Harper, Dr. E. P. Copeland, George G. Hill, Dr. John B. Nichols, W. R. Garret, Dr. Allen Wolfe, John Poole, L. P. McLachlen, Mrs. E. N. Brawner, Frank Theil, S. A. Reeves, Mrs. L. B. Swormstedt, Mrs. E. C. Gott, Mrs. O. J. DeMoll, Joseph Tumulty, Walter A. Brown, Mrs. W. S. Minnix, Mrs. Louis B. Montfort, Alfons B. Landa, M. O. Eldridge, H. V. Hayden, Courtney Wade, W. W. Spaid, Dr. D. L Maxwell, S. L. Hilton, Dr. H. Hurtt, Commissioner L. H. Reichelderfer, Judge and Mrs. M. M. Doyle, Horace Winter, Franklin W. Marsh, Mrs. W. F. Gude, Col. G. H. Morgan, Mrs. Hugh Saum, Mrs. A. P. Drury, Mrs. H. L. Thornton, C. F. Howell, R. H. Van Orsdel, Herbert W. Walker, Ralph W. Lee, J. Bertram Chesterman, Mrs. Isaac Gans, Mrs. Nathan B. Scott and Capt. E. J. Dorn.

G. W. U. Group Picks Officers For Next Year

Columbian Women Choose Miss Elizabeth Peet for Presidency.

Miss Elizabeth Peet, dean of women and professor of languages at Gallaudet College, will head the Columbian Women of the George Washington University next year. Announcement of her election as president for 1932-33 was made at the annual meeting, held Tuesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Cloyd Heck Marvin, wife of the president of the university.

A member of a family which for more than a century has been the leader in this country in the education of the deaf, Miss Peet has won distinction in her own right as a brilliant teacher in this field and as a person of broad culture. She holds the degree of bachelor of arts from the George Washington University and has been closely associated with university affairs and with the activities of the Columbian Women. This is the second time she has been called to the leadership of the organization, having served as president from 1920 to 1922.

Other officers elected are: First vice president, Miss Harriet Garrels; second vice president, Mrs. Joseph W. Cox, wife of Justice Cox, of the Supreme Court of the District; recording secretary, Mrs. Willard Hayes Yeager, wife of the executive chairman of the Columbian College; corresponding secretary, Miss Margaret Maize; assistant corresponding secretary, Miss Dorothy Ruth; treasurer, Miss Mildred Getty; assistant treasurer, Mrs. Russell McNitt; historian, Miss Margaret Pepper.

The progress and accomplishments of Columbian Women during the year now closing were reflected in the reports of retiring officers and committee chairmen. One hundred and two members have been added to the rolls, according to the report of Miss Emilie Margaret White, membership chairman.

Under the chairmanship of Miss Alice Hutchins Drake, a series of programs was arranged for the general meetings, while the various sections, under the leadership of their chairmen, have been highly successful in their activities. The annual banquet, the program for which was arranged by Mrs. Joshua Evans, jr., and the bridge benefit, under the chairmanship of Miss Janet McWilliam, which resulted in the raising of $500 for the George Washington statue fund, were high spots in the list of the year's achievements.

Miss Harriet Garrels presided at the annual meeting in the absence of the retiring president, Mrs. William J. Mallory. A greeting from Mrs. Mallory was read, and the regret of the membership for her inability to be present was expressed by the presiding officer.

With the Citizens

The end of this month will see the cessation of most of the activities of the community citizens' associations until next fall. A number of organizations have planned picnics for next month, but final formal meetings for the year will be held this month by most of them.

The Federation of Citizens Associations probably will continue to function until Congress adjourns, though it usually adjourns for the summer in May also.

Delegates of the various associations are still active on Capitol Hill, directing their opposition chiefly to the Mapes tax increase bills, to the proposed reduction in the Federal contribution to the District government and to the long-threatened reduction in salaries of Federal and District Government employes.

The federation is expected to conclude its gatherings this season as usual with a large picnic or boat trip to which all members of the community organizations are invited. This probably will be held about the middle or latter part of June.

Engineer Invents Neon-Tube 'Organ'

Student's Instrument Lacks Pipes, Reeds and Bellows, but Works Well.

Cincinnati, Ohio (A.P.).—An "organ" without pipes, reeds or bellows was demonstrated by Winston E. Kock, 23-year-old student engineer at the University of Cincinnati.

The organ is an arrangement of Neon tubes—small editions of those used in advertising signs—in electrical circuits. Beyond the keyboard, itself the usual console, the instrument consists only of the tubes, resistances and condensers. Each key controls a tube, and in combination they produce the tremolo effects, the brilliance and color of the pipe organ.

The instrument is Mr. Kock's work toward a degree in electrical engineering. Prof. A. M. Wilson, head of the university's engineering department, said the student "has developed a new idea that represents something really worth while."

New Bridge Magazine Braces French Players

Paris (U.P.).—That France is fast becoming bridge conscious is proven by the publication of a new magazine, called Bridge, in which is discussed a curious system of discarding which is labeled as "American."

Very arbitrary methods of playing also are discussed, but no mention is made of the natural high card discard. Despite her claim that contract bridge originated in France, the country is far behind both America and Great Britain in the science of the game.

Baby in Ohio Survives Two Major Operations

Zanesville, Ohio (U.P.).—Kenneth Davidson, 11-week-old son of Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Davidson, has recovered after a double operation.

The surgeon, performing the operation for hernia, found a badly inflamed appendix. It, too, was removed. The baby was dismissed from the hospital within a few hours and recovered at the home of its parents.

A World of Beauties

Wherein Each Land Has Its Particular Ideals of Feminine Charm

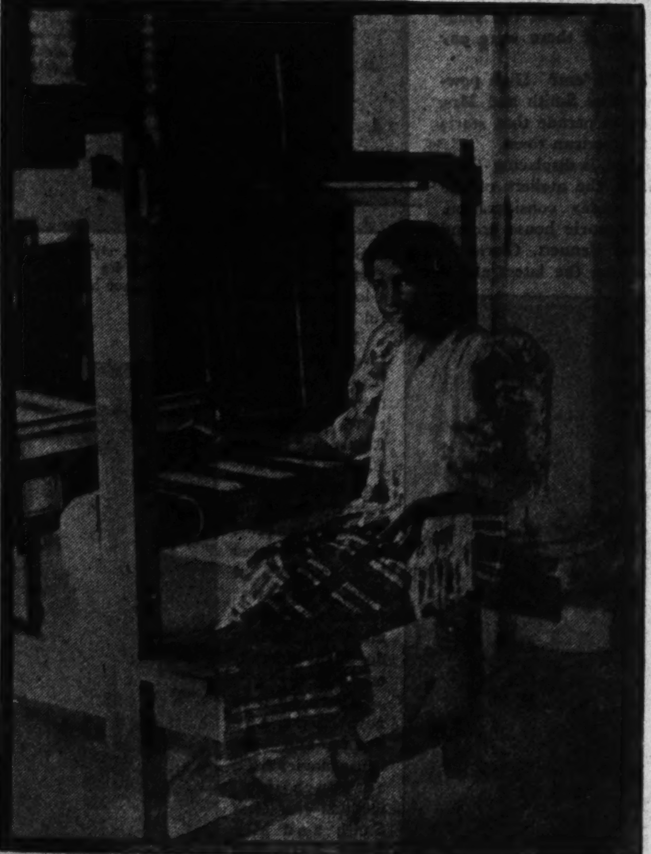
By Clark Wilson

A BEAUTIFUL woman of one race frequently is no more than a curiosity to members of another, so greatly do standards of loveliness vary in different parts of the world. Fashions in clothes, hairdress, and ornamentation which would be outlandish in one section of the globe are quite stylish in another.

Upon this page are pictured several women who are considered exceptionally beautiful by members of their own race. The girl of Tahiti is a dweller in a land of romance, her environment serving to enhance her natural charms. Upon a languorous island in the southern Pacific she applies the arts of feminine attraction in the most favorable of surroundings. The women of Tahiti are treated with the greatest respect and some even have ruled the island as its queen. The most celebrated of these was Pomare, who controlled the destinies of her people at a time when they were making a hopeless stand against domination by European powers. Eventually the French gained control.

The headdress of a Japanese beauty. The ladies of the land of cherry blossoms are small and delicate, with a type of charm all their own.

A girl of Rapa seeking to win a husband by pampering him. Upon this island the women outnumber the men ten to one, so there is keen competition for mates.



A specimen of Philippine pulchritude. In these tropical islands girls attain mature beauty at an early age.

Not far from Tahiti is the little island of Rapa, where a girl must prove her merits against the most severe competition before she can become a bride. This condition is brought about by the fact that the population of Rapa is composed of about ten women to every one man. The girl who is considering marriage, therefore, is quite likely to find any number of others after the young man she favors. This has served to stimulate beauty culture upon the island. A woman will make herself as attractive as possible at all times and will study the likes and dislikes of the men of her acquaintance in a constant endeavor to please them. The girl of Rapa pictured on this page has decided that the best way to win the affection of her young man is to pamper him, so she is feeding him and giving him the most careful attention.

The Japanese woman pictured here is displaying a type of headdress which is very popular in her country. Beauty is likely to avail her very little, however, in attracting a husband, for marriages in Japan frequently are arranged by the families of the parties concerned. Very often the feelings of the young persons are not taken into consideration. It might be thought that a Japanese girl forced into marriage with someone in whom she took little interest would not make a very good wife, but quite the reverse is the case. There are few places on the earth where wives are as unselfish and devoted as are the women of Japan. Stoicism in time of trial is one of the characteristics of the race, and the women no less than the men face the greatest afflictions philosophically and without complaint.

The woman of Jerusalem who appears on this page represents a blending of the many nationalities which have drifted into the Holy City in the course of centuries. Jews, Bedouins, and Turks have been among her ancestors. Her love of barbaric splendor is shown by the many pounds of gold and silver jewelry with which she has decorated herself.

The girls of the Philippines, one of whom is represented on this page, are dainty little creatures, with nut brown skins, pearly teeth, and flashing eyes. The secret of Miss Filipino's charm is that she always is smiling, always full of life and gayety, has a fine appreciation of humor, and is neat as a pin. Despite her vivacity, she is as shy as a startled fawn.

Thus throughout the world each land produces its own type of beauty. Environment, heredity, climate, customs, styles—all exert their influence.

Whence Come the Style Dicta for Mrs. America? From Neighborhood Movies as Well as the Ateliers of Paris

Hollywood, Now Fashion-Conscious, Hires High Priced Advisers and Designers to Fill Its Resplendent Wardrobes

Earl Luick, stylist for Warner Brothers-First National, designed this swirling gown for Loretta Young when she made "The Hatchet Man." It's of white net heavily spangled with gold sequins. Horsehair braid stiffens the wide skirt.

By Eleanor Nangle

FEMININE movie fans smile slyly when they hear serious ladies and gentlemen indulge in earnest argument about the value of movies as an educational medium. As if there were any question!

Take fashions—and what woman wouldn't take 'em? High powered bulletins from Paris read very well, but Miss Smith and Mrs. Jones can glean a lot from the animated fashion parade that starts in Hollywood and penetrates the farthermost American town.

Hollywood, for American women in particular, is displacing Paris as a style center. Geography being what it is, the ateliers of the Rue de la Paix seem just a bit beyond everyday consideration. When we can get visual education at the little movie house around the corner, where Lilyan Tashman, Constance Bennett, Gloria Swanson, Garbo, or Joan Crawford is emoting, and, incidentally, modeling the latest and smartest styles, we have a lot to be thankful for.

Time was when the movies displayed some of the worst sartorial taste imaginable. Remember Theda Bara in those awful vampire effects? Or some of the De Mille heroines — poured into negligees of satin, sequins, feathers, and ermine and told to do their darnedest?

That's all over now. For the stars and — because movies ARE an educational medium—for Miss Smith and Mrs. Jones, Hollywood has enlisted the services of the most skilled and style-conscious dress designers available. The film colony's wardrobes would be any woman's idea of paradise.

Mlle. Gabrielle Chanel is style adviser to United Artists; she has established workrooms there, and it is under her virtually infallible direction that such stars as Gloria Swanson, Mary Pickford, and, recently, Billie Dove and Ina Claire have been gowned. Every woman interested in clothes can profit by keeping an observant eye on that Swanson girl. Aside from a few extreme effects, everything she wears is sound style.

At Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer such stars as Garbo, Joan Crawford, Norma Shearer, and Marion Davies are carefully costumed. Each outfit is drafted first in muslin, modeled, and studied. If you want to know how carefully so, let us tell you that one well-known star (we wouldn't dare name her) is actually bow-legged, a defect never visible on the screen; shoes and skirts are chosen with infinite care so it won't be.

At Warner Brothers-First National, Earl Luick, studio stylist, is at our and their screen stars' service. Luick dressed Lil Dagover for her first American picture; he planned both the typically American and the Chinese costumes Loretta Young wore in "The Hatchet Man"; and he usually plans the clothes worn by Kay Francis, one of the best dressed women on and off the screen.

Lilyan Tashman is considered the best dressed woman on the screen. Off the screen the women who take advantage of her style tips—the fruit of her own and Paramount's style arbiters' flair for dress — can give her plenty of clothes competition. Much of the popularity of the beret, with all of its family ramifications, is due to Lilyan's attachment to it.

It's really comforting to know that if in this topsy-turvy world Paris with its couturiers were blotted out, style in America could go marching on.

As much as possible stars are spared the agony of tedious fittings. Two fitters in the wardrobe of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer here create a gown on a figure the exact measurement of some star.

O, to be Kay Francis, calmly choosing from a well stocked wardrobe a faultless tea gown of chiffon and lace. Kay is one of the screen's best dressed women, as any feminine fan knows.

A velvet gown for a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer star is given a steaming and a final inspection before it makes its screen debut. The good old bathtub process looks futile beside the steaming machine.

The GALLERY GIRL by Mary Clare Davron

She Couldn't Play Golf, She Couldn't Play Bridge; but Janie's Hero-Worshiping Eyes Had a Way with the Masculine Heart . . . An Amusing Short Story of a Home Girl's Romance

WOMEN on a golf course were Peter's pet abomination. With him girls and golf were two separate entities, never to be mixed. He was good at both—that is to say, his golfing was the pride of the course, and his record with girls was eminently satisfactory—to himself, at least. At the present moment he didn't happen to be in love, but that was a condition any day might remedy.

He was ready to tee off at the first hole when, far down on the course, he spied a pink skirt—a woman, bringing the colors of the boudoir to the sacred precincts of the golf course. He shrugged his scorn and hoped she was sufficiently far ahead of him that he could not possibly have to play through her.

His shot was perfect. The ball whistled down the fairway like a bullet sped from a machine gun. He got a four on that hole, a four on the next, and on the next—par for the hole being four—he got a birdie. He was on his way to the fifth—well satisfied with himself—when again he spied the pink skirt. She was sitting on the stone wall. Good! If he could put her behind him he would be rid of the annoyance of her and her color scheme. Though how came she to be sitting on a stone fence in the middle of a golf game!

"Lady on the wall wants to speak to you." It was his caddy.

"To me!" Peter's astonishment was profound. It was well known around the club that he never played with women.

"Yes, sir." The caddy, who knew Peter's game and reputation, held an odd light in his eye. As for Peter, there seemed nothing else for him to do, so he strode over to the wall.

The girl remained seated where she was, her feet reaching only half way to the ground. Peter saw she was dressed entirely in pink, her hair hung in curly clusters round her face, her eyes were blue and troubled.

"You are Mr. De Lisser, aren't you?" she asked.

"Yes," said Peter, and something in the troubled look captured him for a moment. Any place else but on a golf course—"What can I do for you?"

"You can teach me to play golf."

"Wha—at?" She gave him back look for look out of grave, unblinking eyes.

"What was that you said?" he demanded.

"I asked if you'd teach me to play golf. My uncle, where I'm visiting, told me last night that you'd won the championship of this course. He said that next to Bobby Jones——"

Peter bowed. "But, my dear young lady, I'd never think of teaching any one, least of all a——" He was about to say "least of all, a woman," but changed his mind. "The pro here is very good, indeed," he said instead, "you could doubtless arrange with him——"

"I don't want the pro to teach me," she said firmly. "I'll learn from a champion or not at all."

Her sheer effrontry held Peter where he stood. After all, maybe she wasn't quite——. He tried again.

"Would you mind," he asked with savage gentleness, "telling me why you want me to teach you?"

"It takes a champion to beat a champion," she said succinctly, "and he's the champion of our course at home."

"He?"

"Man I'm interested in at home."

Peter was mollified at once. "That makes it perfectly clear," he said gallantly. "Love can do strange things to you—make you want to do even stranger ones. You playing golf, for instance."

"What makes you think I'd be so bad at it?" she said, looking up quizzically.

"What makes you think you'd be good? Tell me, now, what did you do that last hole in?"

She gave an uneasy side glance at the caddy and two voices rang out at the same time.

"Seven."

"Fifteen."

Under Peter's accusing eye she wilted. "O, well, if you're going to count all those tiny little strokes."

"Just as I thought," he said. He sat down beside her on the wall, in order that his eyes might be more nearly on a level with hers. He wanted to bring home to her the enormity of her sin. "You—in common with the rest of your sex—have no sense of the integrity of the game. If you say you did it in seven strokes when you actually took fifteen——"

"I didn't hit anything with those extra strokes he's talking about." She turned to glare at the caddy.

"You didn't what? O, good lord!" Peter got up. "Listen, child," the girl seemed to have shrunk into a smaller heap, "take up something within your own line," his appraising eye took in her littleness—"something feminine," he told her.

"I'm too damn feminine as it is." He was surprised at this outburst of spirit.

"Mustn't say naughty words," he admonished.

"I will, too. Damn, damn, damn!"

MARTIN DOANE, president of the club, stopped him on his way out that afternoon.

"Got anything to do tonight?" Martin asked.

Peter always had something to do—some girl to call on, some game to be played, some drive he could take. Tonight, however, there wasn't anything special.

"No," he said.

"Come on over, then, and get in a bridge game. Couple of fellows coming up from the city."

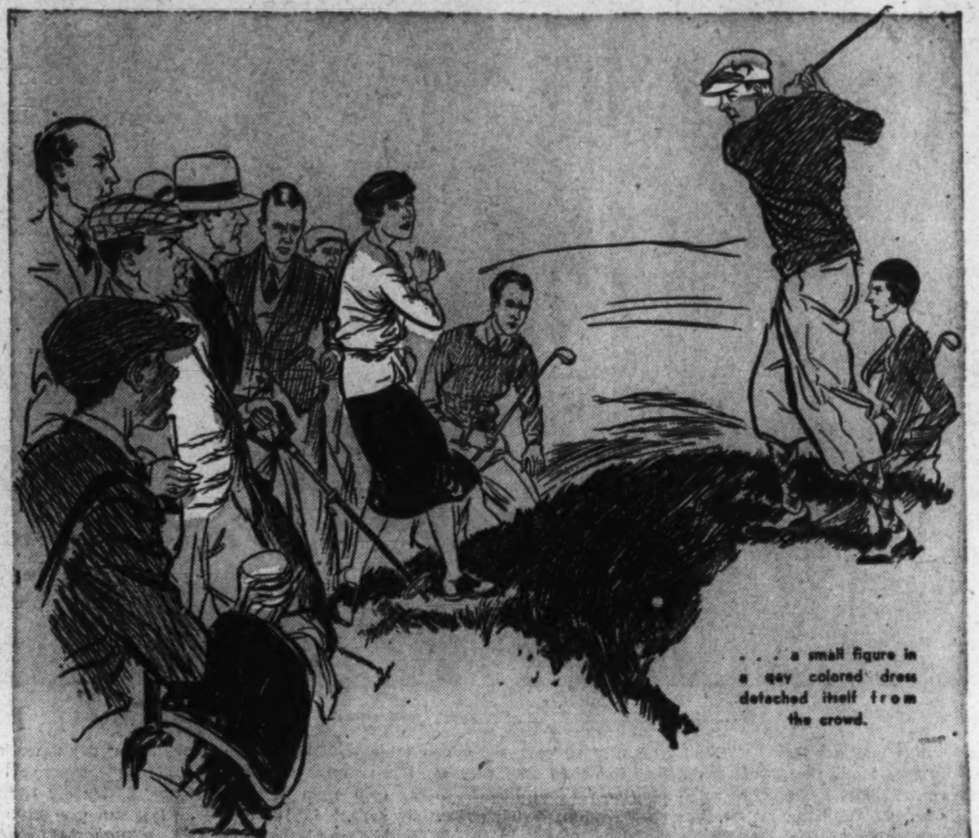
Peter went. Bridge was another of the things in which he excelled, and he rather liked playing with the older men because they took their game so seriously.

The first person he saw when he got out of his roadster at the Doane's was the girl in the pink dress. She was dressed in pink now, too, a different dress, down to her toes, and she was sitting alone among the striped cushions, the gayly painted wicker and other decorative knick-knacks on the Doane porch. Curls stood up all over her head, her face was still grave, but she did manage to smile up at him.

"Uncle will be out in a minute," she said. "The other two men haven't come yet."

Peter sat down on the top step and looked frankly up at her. Judged by any standards where women were women and not trying to ape men by playing golf, she was all right. He found her now very restful

"Still damning things?" he inquired, smiling indulgently at her.



. . . a small figure in a gay colored dress detached itself from the crowd.

"Yes," she said. "Mr. De Lisser, will you teach me how to play bridge?"

Once again Peter came to earth with a thump. He was as opposed to women at a bridge table as he was on a golf course and never played with them if he could help it.

"Let me get this straight," he said, looking at her very much as one would the native of some unknown planet. "This morning you asked me to teach you golf. Now you want me to show you how to play bridge. Granting I should run into you tomorrow morning—which heaven forbid—is there something else you'd ask me to teach?"

"I don't know what else you know," she offered as a perfectly good answer.

"This fellow you are interested in—he plays good bridge, too, I suppose."

"He plays in tournaments," she said. "I'd like to play some bridge or golf so I could surprise him when he comes down here for the week-end."

"You'd learn a lot of golf or bridge in a week," Peter said pityingly. "What I can't understand is, why, with such a knockout to teach you things, you single out a stranger merely recommended by your uncle."

"Van won't teach me anything. In fact, he flatly refused. Said I haven't any game sense."

"A man after my own heart," Peter answered.

"Yes, but," her tones were aggrieved, "I notice he plays around the course with Nina Gray. She's most as good a player as he is."

"What do you do while he's playing golf?"

"He lets me walk around the course with him."

"Exciting," said Peter. "And while he plays bridge?"

"He lets me sit beside him and watch his plays."

"He certainly is fond of you, commented Peter.

"Yes, but I never get a chance to use anything I learn. It isn't that I'm so anxious to play these games. Nina Gray plays bridge with him, too, and I get sort of tired of just being gallery all the time. I wouldn't mind so much if I weren't sick of Nina."

"That does complicate things," said Peter meditatively. "Are there any other lines in which this paragon excels?"

"He excels in everything," she said plaintively.

"Depressing!"

"No, it's nice. I don't excel in a single thing—except housekeeping, if you call that anything."

"What do you like best to do?" he asked.

"I like to sit in cars and go fast," she told him.

"O, that's your vice? Fast driving?"

"I like to ride with some one who drives fast. I don't drive myself."

"Well, don't ask me to teach you," he said. He was beginning to be amused by her wistfulness over the things she couldn't do.

. . . .

"Well, well," said Doane, who was both a golf and a bridge enthusiast, "looks like we ought to have a good game. O, by the way, Peter, meet my niece. Janie, this is the best golfer and the best bridge player in these parts."

"You said so last night. I asked him today to teach me both."

"You wha—at?" Martin Doane's mouth dropped. He was a bachelor whose hobbies were sacred and who did not welcome feminine intrusion.

"Well, of all things!" said Martin Doane. He looked speculatively at his niece, then said again, "Of all things!"

This was Peter's own sentiment exactly, but being essentially gallant he could not help feeling sorry for the pint size girl as the wistful look deepened in her eyes and her lips began to droop.

"As a matter of fact," said Peter quickly, "I'm thinking of showing her a stroke or two tomorrow."

"On our golf couse?" demanded Martin Doane.

"Why not?"

"Sacrilege!" hissed Mr. Doane.

"She won't learn much, but it won't hurt her—or the course."

Doane looked sharply at him. "You must be crazy," he said just as the other two men came up on the porch."

"Can I sit beside you and watch your game?" Janie asked Peter.

"Sure. But if you see four aces in my hand don't yell out loud or anything."

Again the reproachful look. "I know better than that."

"Then you'll be a big help," he said, and smiled at her till she smiled back.

"How old are you, Janie?" he asked once when he was dummy and had removed Janie to a far corner.

"Twenty-two."

"You don't look seventeen. What do you do with your life when you aren't yearning to play golf or bridge?"

"I keep house for my father. He's just like uncle," she added as though that would explain a lot.

"I see."

"Did you really mean what you said about showing me strokes tomorrow?"

Peter hesitated for the barest fraction of a second.

"You don't need to tell me," she said, "but thanks, anyway, for coming to the rescue with uncle."

That made up his mind for him. He'd show her a stroke or two. At the club he'd be laughed at, of course. Peter De Lisser on the links with a woman!

"I'm certainly going to take you round in the morning," he said.

They went back to the bridge table and Janie sat beside him, never uttering a sound, watching his bids and his plays with such keen interest that he felt her approval and unconsciously began to preen himself. His game seemed, if anything, improved. Something in her wide-eyed admiration stimulated him. Playing at a cent a point, he won forty-two dollars.

AFTER the game he took her for a ride in his car.

"Just a little spin," he told her uncle. "She hasn't had a chance to enjoy herself today."

"She can have a good time when Van Glickman comes down," said her uncle indifferently.

"Van Glickman!" exclaimed Peter. He turned to Janie. "Is Van Glickman the bird you're priming to play golf with?"

She nodded. "He's coming down here to play in the tournament."

"And don't I know it!" shouted Peter. He was matched against Van Glickman for the tournament.

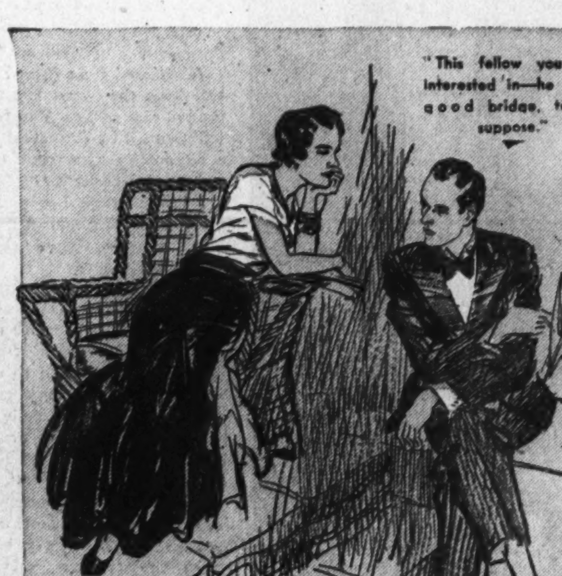
"Stick around, Janie," said her uncle mildly, "and you'll learn things."

They turned in at a place Peter knew on the Post road. The floor was larger than that in the usual place of the sort and a noted orchestra was playing. Janie's eyes sparkled.

"It's glorious to be here," she beamed, while she and Peter danced.

"If Van Glickman never lets you dance, how is it you're so good at it?"

"I love it. And because I never get a chance otherwise, I take dancing lessons three times a week. None of them knows about it." She looked up, expecting condemnation.



"This fellow you are interested in—he plays good bridge, too, I suppose."

"Good for you," said Peter. "Maybe I'm speaking out of turn, Janie, and if I am you don't have to answer me, but are you very much in love with Van Glickman?"

"Sometimes I've wondered. But I think I really am. You see, he can do so many things——"

"Stop right there," said Peter. "You don't love people for what they can do."

"No? What, then?"

"What?" thundered Peter. "Don't you know even the most elemental truths? You love people for what they are, Janie."

"Yes. Van is so many things."

"Not that at all," said Peter impatiently. "Achievements don't count when it comes to love. It's something deeper. It's——" Peter was stuck. It was the first time he had ever been called upon to define love. He tried a new line. "Tell me, when you are thinking of Van Glickman himself, not his cups and medals, what phase of him do you think about? What is there about him that appeals to you?"

"I don't know. He—he's a friend of my father and of my brother——"

"Neither sufficient reason for your being in love with him."

"Then, how do you tell when you're in love?" she asked humbly.

"You don't tell," said Peter promptly; "it tells you."

HE TOOK her out on the course next morning, wondering why he had ever let himself in for this. She would never be a good golfer—not if she practiced a thousand years, but her eagerness to learn was pathetic. He showed her how to handle a mashie and left her to practice while he played the course himself. He promised to look her up later and see what progress she had made.

Every morning she was on the course, diligently practicing before he got there. Every day Peter checked up on her and privately reflected it was a pity so much conscientious effort should come to nothing. Usually he drove her home to her uncle's house and sometimes had lunch with her there.

The tournament was set for Wednesday. Van Glickman come down on Tuesday and that afternoon Peter ran into Janie and him out on the course. Van Glickman was finishing a practice round, Janie walking beside him. Peter smiled at a note of importance about her that was foreign to her. She seemed to hover judicially over Van's shots—"As if," smiled Peter, "she knew anything about it." Van Glickman's golf, however, was nothing to smile at, especially if you were matched against him the next day.

On No. 18, a par four hole, Van Glickman got a good drive. Peter gazed on in admiration while Janie and Van Glickman came down the course toward him. Janie seemed to be expostulating, explaining. Peter wondered at this deviation from her usual breathless silence. They came nearer to him and his profound admiration of Van Glickman's golf gave way to a distinct shock as he heard Janie's voice. She was suggesting she show Van Glickman how to play an approach shot with a mashie. Peter gasped. Then he smiled. "Good lord," he said.

"Janie, what's got into you?" Van Glickman was querulously inquiring. "What on earth makes you think you could even hit a ball?" Cold horror froze Peter at her next remark. "Mr. De Lisser has taught me how to play," she said with insufferable importance.

Van Glickman, who had not yet seen Peter, remarked, "Mr. De Lisser must be crazy."

"He's a fine golfer," stoutly from Janie.

"You're telling me something," said Van Glickman, experimentally swinging his club.

"He wouldn't play the ball in that direction." She took a stance and made a motion with an imaginary club. "He would play it up toward that hillock on the right."

"I am going to play it toward the sand pile on the left."

"Mr. De Lisser never once played it that way."

"I don't care how De Lisser plays it. To the left is the logical way." Van Glickman carefully measured his distance.

But Janie, with the burning fervor of the zealot who knows what she knows, dashed forward and reached for his club. With an air of amused tolerance Van Glickman handed it over just as his eye fell on Peter standing observantly by.

"Get this, De Lisser," he seemed to say; "it's going to be good."

Janie grasped the mashie and took her stance in a way that struck Peter as an imitation of somebody—probably himself. Carefully she surveyed the distance, solidly struck the ball and, as their unbelieving eyes looked on, lifted it clear on the green, dead to the pin.

Van Glickman in his astonishment opened his mouth to ask a question, reached to take his club from her. But Janie paid no attention to his popping eyes, his general air of incredulity. She handed him the club, pushed him aside and, grabbing a putter from the caddy, dashed to the green. Peter and Van Glickman were drawn as one man into her gallery. Side by side they stood in breathless wonder.

On the green Janie carefully addressed the ball, studied her lie, swung her putter and sunk the ball for a birdie.

The two men looked at each other.

"Well, I'm damned," said Peter softly.

But Van Glickman's eyes had taken on an injured look, his voice rose to a querulous pitch. "There now," he said accusingly. "I hope you like what you've done." His indignation seemed to mount, a dejected look spread over his face. "You've ruined the best gallery a man ever had."

"She'd never be able to do that again if she played a thousand years," said Peter.

"I know that," Van Glickman said. "But she has done it, and she'll be forever telling me how. In fact, all afternoon she's been——"

Janie came up to them with the air of one to whom it is all in the day's work. "Was that good?" she asked Peter. But she didn't wait for his reply. Beyond a brief, "Mr. De Lisser taught me to play like that," to Van Glickman, she didn't seem to care much one way or the other and her air was distinctly preoccupied. Her eyes were on a figure coming toward them down the course.

"I should think Nina Gray would wear something beside those drab colors," she said, smoothing down her own sweater, which was the exact shade of salmon salad.

NEXT day Nina Gray won the woman's tournament from Vera Wickersham. Van Glickman and Peter, paired against each other in the final round, had arrived at the eighteenth hole with a tied score.

Van Glickman was plainly nervous as he approached it. Janie, well up in front, fluttered excitedly in the offing. She had been a perfect gallery until then. Now, at the scene of her triumph of yesterday, she was visibly excited and something told Peter that Van Glickman, always a sensitive player, was aware of it and that it would affect his play.

Peter had the honor and his mighty drive whammed the

The King of Jazz Tells How He Took Off 100 Pounds

The Secret of Mr. Whiteman's Reducing? The Bathroom Scales

By Antoinette Donnelly

Paul Whiteman, in his 288-pound days, before he started dieting . . .

. . . and after he took off the hundredweight.

HE TELLS it: "She said if I didn't reduce she'd leave me!"

She says: "No, that isn't the way it happened. I said, 'Darling, you'd look handsomer if you'd take off some of that weight.'"

Anyway, they both won. He took off one hundred pounds in one year. He came down, in round numbers, from 288 to 188.

He is Paul Whiteman, famous music master and orchestra leader. She is his wife, the former Margaret Livingston of the movies. Mr. Whiteman stands six feet and a half inch in his stocking feet and carries his new weight, 188 pounds, magnificently. The only memento of pre-reducing days Mr. Whiteman now boasts is one round baby chin where before he grew three or four of them, as he tells it.

Anyway, he was a great big boy at one time, this Mrs. Whiteman's boy, Paul. He tipped the scale at 315 in his weightiest prime. Today he stands a fine figure of a gentleman, sans stomach, short wind, and rapid heart. Looks easily fifteen years younger than when he was trying to corner the avoirdupois market. There's 12½ inches less of him around the waistline, and his hat measurement came down from 7¾ to 7¼ inches in the year's battle with calories. His shoemaker doesn't have to use as much leather, either, which Mr. Whiteman admits is no petty consideration in lean times.

A marvelous feat in reducing is Mr. Whiteman's. A slow, steady, and sane process! No freak diets. No buncombe will you hear from his lips. Any girl gushing around him looking for a way out of her poundage in two or three weeks is due for an icy glare. And don't mention in his hearing hard boiled egg and tomato, pineapple and lamb chop, or eighteen day diets. They're either the boloney or the death of you, take it from one who's tried them all and lived to see the folly of their reducing ways.

Don't leap to the conclusion that this gentleman is a grouch or has become a self-appointed sage on the subject of weight control. As a grouch he is a good-natured, charming failure. As a sage he is almost fearfully modest about projecting his experience as one for you and you and you to follow.

He believes, in fact, that what is good for him may not be the proper route to Slimville at all. But he does know that he feels 40 per cent better than eight years ago; that he can get insurance now which he couldn't get before. And that he has a better chance today at a good, active twenty-year stretch ahead than he had when he was hoarding his poundage. Also he finds he needs less sleep than formerly. When he ate a heavy meal before retiring and garnished it with the "sauce" that Mr. Volstead has been trying to rule out of existence he found it took about three hours for food to digest and a long period of sleep to work off the ennui.

No, Mr. Whiteman's not afraid to tell you that he could tuck a liquor draught or two away behind that flesh portal of his in the old days. And he doesn't want you to think, either, just because he gave it up, that he and Andy Volstead are bosom pals.

"Don't," he pleaded over the lunch table with me, "give me any holier-than-thou face, please! I just find I can keep my weight better without liquor. Other men seem to keep their lean lines without denying themselves alcohol. It's just my break that I can't."

But here's something you girl readers might tell the boy friends, if they're not listening in on this Whiteman broadcast. Mr. Whiteman says, with authoritative medical backing, that at forty a man can so shape himself physically as to determine whether he is going to have twenty good years ahead or twenty rotten ones. Waiting until forty-five to begin may be more than five years too late. Around forty is the age to take reckoning.

There is nothing sensational, as we have said, about Mr. Whiteman's diet. But that what he did do has proved excellent is seen in the tremendous amount of work he is now able to carry on. Three days of the week Mr. Whiteman's day starts at 8:30 and lasts until midnight. The other days are just as crammed with work, though the hours may be more concentrated.

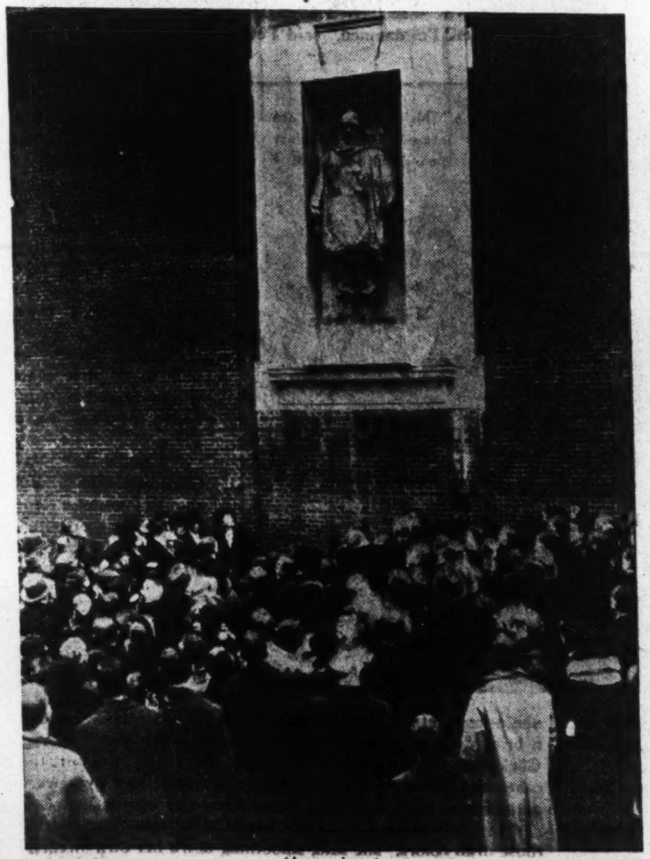
He has no set diet program. He has a bathroom scale that is interviewed every morning at the same hour. When it starts dipping down he throws in a bit more starch and sweets; when it starts going up he checks on these things. He does not eat peas, beans, corn, potatoes, or white breads except on his starch days. These starch days have no set time, either, except as regulated by the down-sliding scale figures. He eats enormous platters of salad, vegetable, fruit, all kinds. Uses mineral oil in dressing instead of olive oil. Eats quantities of fruit and drinks fruit juices. Grapefruit is an especial pet because it doesn't require sugar trimming. He eats no breakfast. His first meal of the day, at 12, may consist of salad, fish or meat, or a combination, just as he feels. Fish and chicken are important portions of his meals as a rule. All kinds of fish. Meat and fish always boiled or broiled. Nothing fried. And no liquor, ale, or champagne.

Mr. Whiteman's loss of weight during the first month was enormous, but he explains that as a boiling out of his liquid content. This fat sluiced off pretty easily. He has never missed a day's work during the whole reducing regime.

The only exercise he did was swimming. Swimming—not bathing. He did twenty minutes a day strenuous swimming all last summer—after a workout on the sand, with the help of hot sun rays, to work up a sweat. After the workout he would plunge into the briny waters and spend twenty hard minutes plowing around there. He eats no food now after the dinner hour, which may be anywhere from 6:30 to 8.

And that's all there is to the hundred-pound reduction story. Except that Mr. Whiteman is conscientious to an unusual degree about setting himself up as an authority for all fat victims to follow, willy-nilly. He has learned a great deal about food values and their arrangement in a well-balanced, maintenance form of daily eating. This information, he claims, is within reach of every one determined to reduce sanely and in a health-gaining manner.

Honoring a Polar Explorer



(Acme photo.)

A STATUE of Sir Ernest Shackleton, the noted explorer who lies buried on the island of South Georgia in the antarctic regions, was unveiled recently in London. It is set in a niche on the outer walls of the Royal Geographical society building. The accompanying photograph was taken while the ceremony was in progress. Shackleton made his first trip into the south polar regions in 1901, acting as a lieutenant on one of the early expeditions commanded by Capt. Robert F. Scott. On three subsequent occasions he was the leader of exploring parties, penetrating to within 97 miles of the south pole. His last expedition was cut short by an attack of influenza which terminated in his death at South Georgia island in 1922. It was thought most fitting that he should be left resting in the country to which his love of adventure had lured him, so his body never has been brought back to his native land.

ball down the course like a kite in the tail of a comet. Van Glickman followed with a drive that brought a murmur of admiration from the crowd. It brought his ball to almost the identical position it held in his practice round of yesterday. After Peter's second shot Van Glickman stepped up to his own ball, took his stance, measured his distance and was just about to shoot when a small figure in a gay colored dress detached itself from the crowd, made as if to run forward, swung an imaginary ball and then was forcefully drawn back by a strong male arm beside her.

It wasn't much, but it was enough. On the eighteenth hole Van Glickman played one over par, while Peter parred the hole and won the match by a stroke.

That night there was a dance at the club. Peter, of course, was the big shot of the evening. Van Glickman, with his showing and his reputation, was far from being a negligible quantity. And in his party was the victorious woman's champion, statuesque and striking Nina Gray. In his party also was Janie, small, wistful eyed, in a dress the color of a June rose.

"Better sport than I thought," said Peter to himself, "to stand for her at all." He reflected that no one in the place except the defeated champion and himself knew the enormity of her sin or the havoc it had caused for Van Glickman.

"Janie, what are you looking so unhappy about?" Peter was dancing with her. "Are you sorry for what you did to Van Glickman?"

"If he'd played the hole as I told him to he wouldn't have lost the match," she contended stoutly.

"You lost him the match, Janie. You were a rotten gallery for him on that eighteenth hole."

"But I wasn't. If he'd played as I told him to you wouldn't have beaten him. Besides, he ought to be impervious to byplay in the gallery. You are. You didn't allow what I did to affect you."

Peter looked down at her. "Do you know what I think, Janie?" he asked solemnly.

"No. What?"

"I think you were my gallery all the time. I—I don't think you'll ever be Van Glickman's gallery again. I don't want you to be." He smiled at the gravity in her eyes. "I think I owe it to him to take you off his hands."

"How could you do that?"

"You're always wanting me to teach you things. That's one thing I'd like to teach you—how to love me, Janie."

"O, I do already," she said simply.

"You do?" he asked incredulously, then added quickly, "because I won the championship?"

"Not that at all," she said. "I love you the way you said people should love—not because of anything you can do, but because of what you are."

"What are I, Janie? What makes you think you love me?"

"Because I like the funny things you are always saying. I like the look in your eyes when you say them. I like the way time goes skipping along when I'm with you, the feeling that comes in here——" she laid her hand over her fluttering pink bosom. "I like the way you smile, I like your curly hair——" Her shining eyes looked up at him. "Don't we dance well together?" she asked.

Gently he drew her off the dance floor. They made their way to the bench out beside the first tee.

"It's the things we do together that count, isn't it?" she asked as they sat beneath the stars. "What difference does it make if you are the champion and I am only gallery? It's something we can do together. Champions need galleries."

"They do, Janie. I want you for my gallery always."

"That will suit me," said Janie. "I'd rather be gallery for you than be a champion like Nina Gray."

"Do I understand you are retiring from golf entirely?" asked Peter with a smile that made her laugh outright.

"Yes, I am. You can play golf with father and uncle and my brother so long as you only dance with me."

"I've never seen your father, of course, but I've really never had the slightest desire to dance with your uncle——"

She laughed again. "Won't uncle be surprised when he hears about us?"

"I don't think he will. You see, I told him I was going to try my luck. He said to go ahead and he'd give us a big car for a wedding present."

"O, won't that be nice! A fast one, we'll get. Then you can drive and I can sit beside you. We can go everywhere. Peter, what color shall we get?"

He looked down at her curly head against his shoulder, her hand in his, her eyes smiling up at him. He drew his arm tighter about her sweetness and gently kissed her.

"Pink," he said.

Ready to Nip a Street Riot

(Acme photo.)

IN PRAGUE, the capital of Czecho-Slovakia, the police recently have been equipped for riot service. At any unlawful gathering which threatens to end in mob violence the uniformed upholders of the law act with efficiency and speed. The officer in command warns the agitators to disperse, and if the command is not carried out at once the police begin tossing tear gas bombs. The bombs are not dangerous to life, but they are unpleasant things to trifle with, as they release a cloud of gas that causes copious tears. The police wear masks that protect them from the gas. The police in the accompanying picture are equipped with masks and bombs.

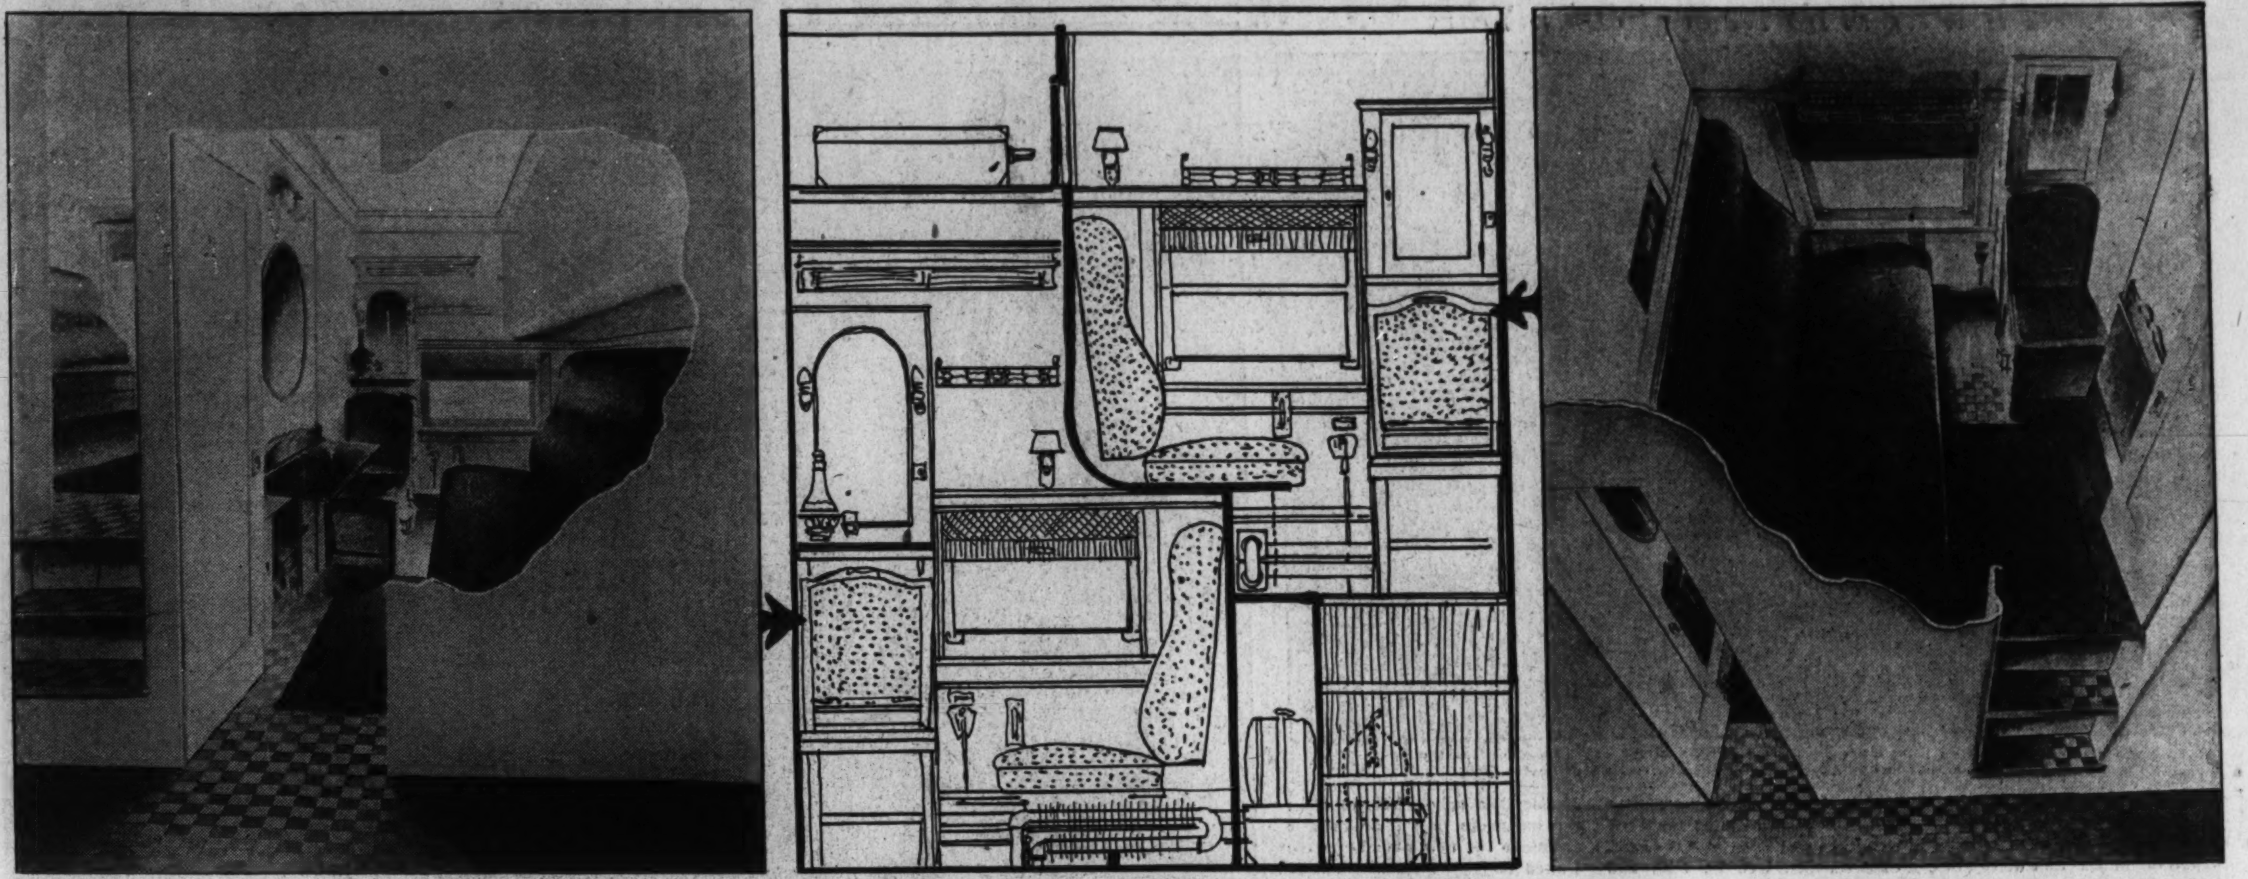
A Question of Vintage

"This is the real pre-war stuff!"

"You don't mean to say there is going to be another war?"

Twin Innovations for Solid Comfort in Travel

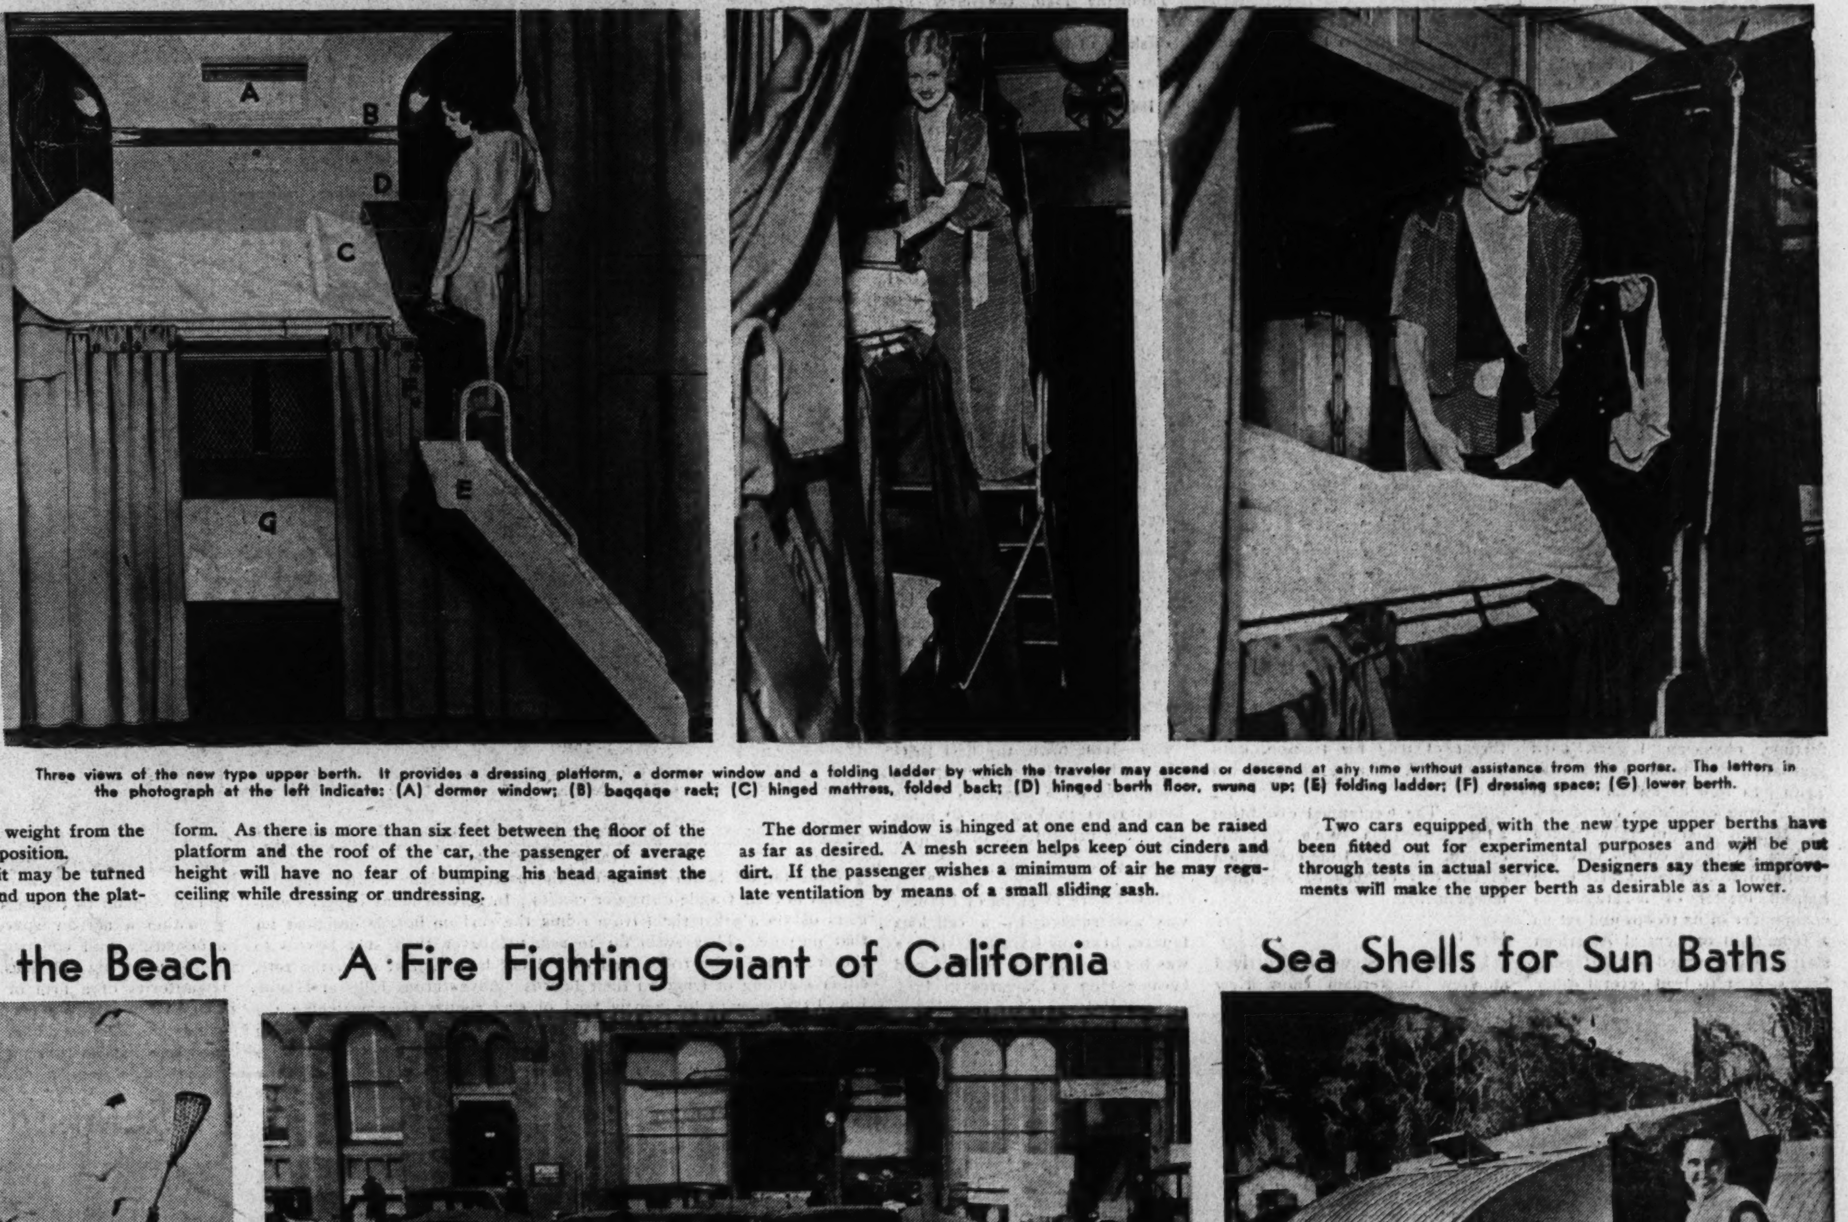


A photo-diagram of the new duplex compartment in a Pullman car. This consists of two single bedrooms, placed as shown in the center diagram. The lower room, at the left, is entered from the corridor of the car, and the upper room, at the right is reached by a short staircase. The arrows indicate the position of these compartments in the center diagram

THE lot of the traveler continually becomes more enjoyable. Every few weeks there comes an announcement to the effect that some inconvenience has been done away with or some new accommodation added. It is becoming almost as comfortable to travel by rail as to stay at home Two innovations in Pullman car construction—the duplex compartment and the new style upper berth—are illustrated on this page.

The duplex compartment consists of two single rooms arranged as in the diagram at the top of the page. The lower is entered directly from the corridor of the car, and the upper is reached by a short staircase Each room has its own toilet facilities, window lighting and heating. There is a comfortable lounge for daytime travel, and at night the back of the seat is turned down to form a spring-mattressed bed. Two cars containing rooms of this type now are in operation. They each have two duplex compartments and ten regular sections.

The new style upper berth, shown in the lower strip of pictures, has been designed to do away with some of the inconveniences which hitherto have caused an upper to be considered less desirable than a lower berth. The new upper is reached by a folding stairway which always is available for use without the necessity of summoning the porter; there is a platform which gives the occupant plenty of room to stand erect while dressing or undressing, and a dormer window which permits ventilation to suit the traveler's wishes.



Three views of the new type upper berth. It provides a dressing platform, a dormer window and a folding ladder by which the traveler may ascend or descend at any time without assistance from the porter. The letters in the photograph at the left indicate: (A) dormer window; (B) baggage rack; (C) hinged mattress, folded back; (D) hinged berth floor, swung up; (E) folding ladder; (F) dressing space; (G) lower berth.

When not in use, the ladder is folded flat against the end of the section and takes up little space in the aisle. After the ascending or descending passenger has removed his weight from the ladder it automatically returns to the folded position.

The foot of the berth is hinged so that it may be turned back to provide space for the occupant to stand upon the platform. As there is more than six feet between the floor of the platform and the roof of the car, the passenger of average height will have no fear of bumping his head against the ceiling while dressing or undressing.

The dormer window is hinged at one end and can be raised as far as desired. A mesh screen helps keep out cinders and dirt. If the passenger wishes a minimum of air he may regulate ventilation by means of a small sliding sash.

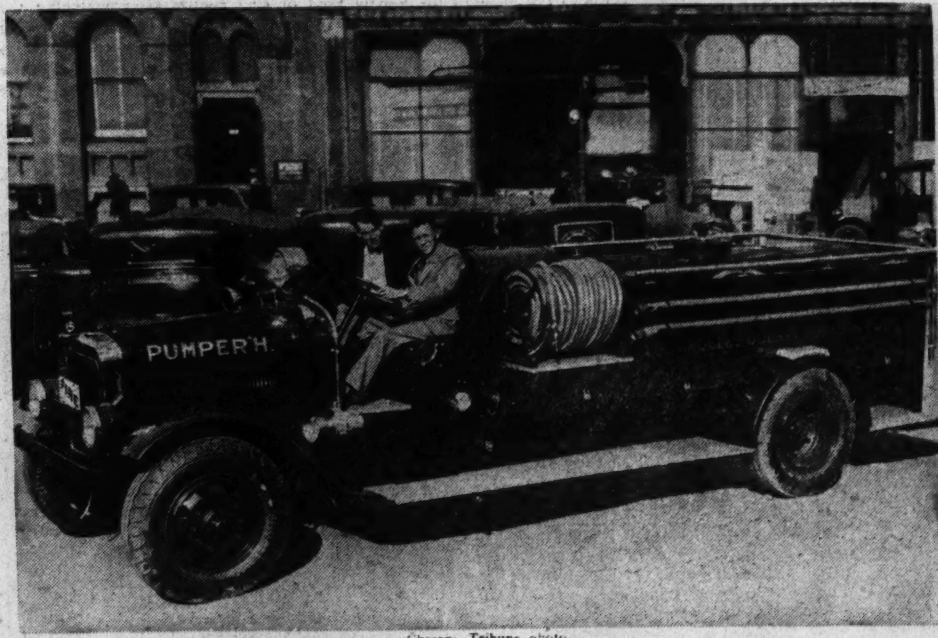
Two cars equipped with the new type upper berths have been fitted out for experimental purposes and will be put through tests in actual service. Designers say these improvements will make the upper berth as desirable as a lower.

Nimble Naiads of the Beach

(Acme photo.)

LACROSSE, a French-Canadian game borrowed from the Indians, is a pastime requiring great skill, much energy, and the utmost in endurance So it hardly would be supposed that the bathing beauties of Long Beach, Cal., pictured here, were doing anything more than pretending to play lacrosse. Flourishing her crosse, or hand net, in her hand and leaping nimbly in the wet sand, each girl is doing her best to appear graceful in the photograph. After all, the result is an action picture and it really doesn't matter whether the girls are trying to catch the seagulls in their nets or trap the elusive lacrosse ball

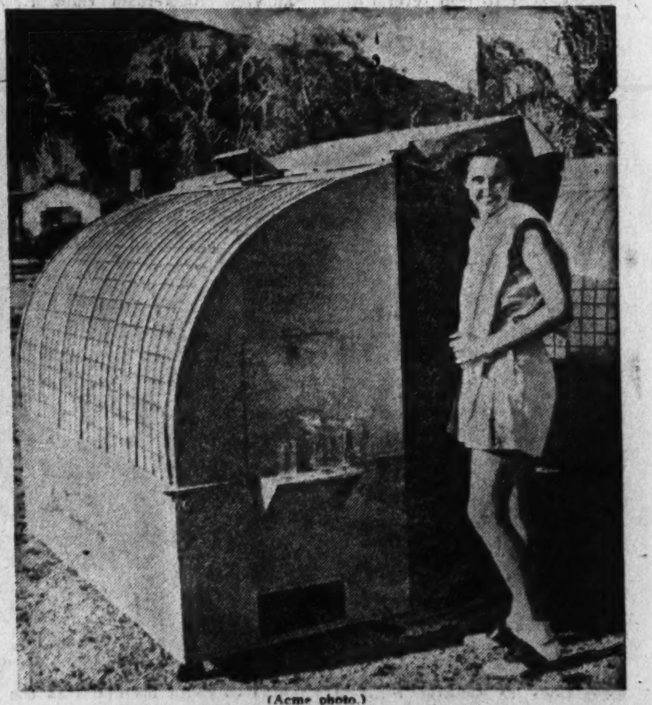
A Fire Fighting Giant of California



(Chicago Tribune photo.)

IN THE California county in which the city of Los Angeles is located extreme precaution is taken to prevent the spread of fires in wooded sections and upon ground covered by brush and second growth timber. The county fire department has placed in service a number of gigantic trucks designed for battling brush fires in the mountainous areas. Each truck is engined with a 103-horsepower motor, capable of operating the vehicle at a speed of more than 50 miles an hour. The truck has multiple speeds forward and three in reverse, being well equipped to tackle the steepest hill or the deepest mud. Upon each truck is a 600 gallon water tank and two powerful pumps. The weight of one of these monster fire fighters is approximately nine tons. The new equipment was designed by C. H. Reinmuller, assistant fire warden of Los Angeles county. One of the huge trucks is shown in the accompanying picture with S. O. Turner, chief county forester, at the wheel, and Reinmuller, the designer, in the seat beside him. California has much valuable timber which is in danger of being set ablaze by some careless camper at any time during the dry season. Each year fires destroy much fine timber in the west.

Sea Shells for Sun Baths

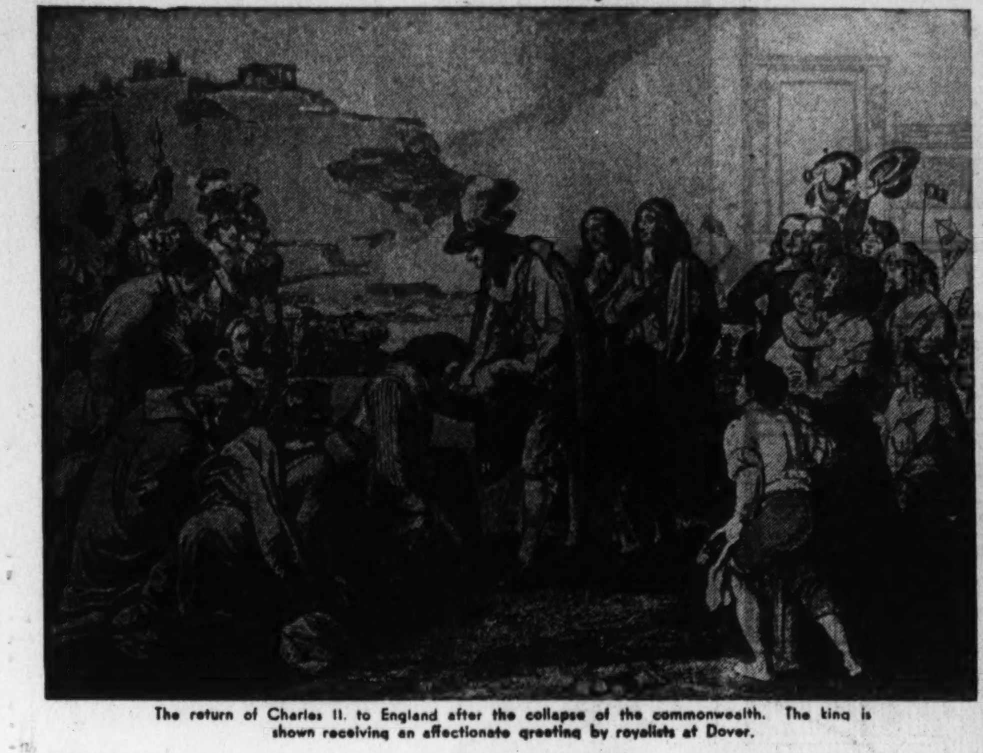


(Acme photo.)

A GREAT deal of experimenting has been carried on of late with various types of glass for use in solariums. The ordinary type of glass, it has been found, excludes some of the beneficial rays of the sun. Other types of glass, it has been found by tests, are penetrated by the beneficial rays, but also permit the harmful rays to shine through. One of the latest materials used for the windows of a solarium is a sea shell found in vast quantities in the Philippine islands. Pictured here is a young woman about to enjoy a light treatment in a novel sun-bathing kiosk at Palm Springs, Cal. The curving window of this kiosk is glazed with the Philippine shells

"The Front Page" of History

The Week in the News of Other Years



The return of Charles II. to England after the collapse of the commonwealth. The king is shown receiving an affectionate greeting by royalists at Dover.

TODAY'S news is tomorrow's history. Events of the past which may have seemed unimportant at the time have come to be considered shining mileposts in the story of civilization. Likewise happenings of the present which may not particularly impress us may assume vast importance as the years pile up. Important dates in history which fall within the week beginning today make up the following offering of "spot" news of other days for "The Front Page" of History.

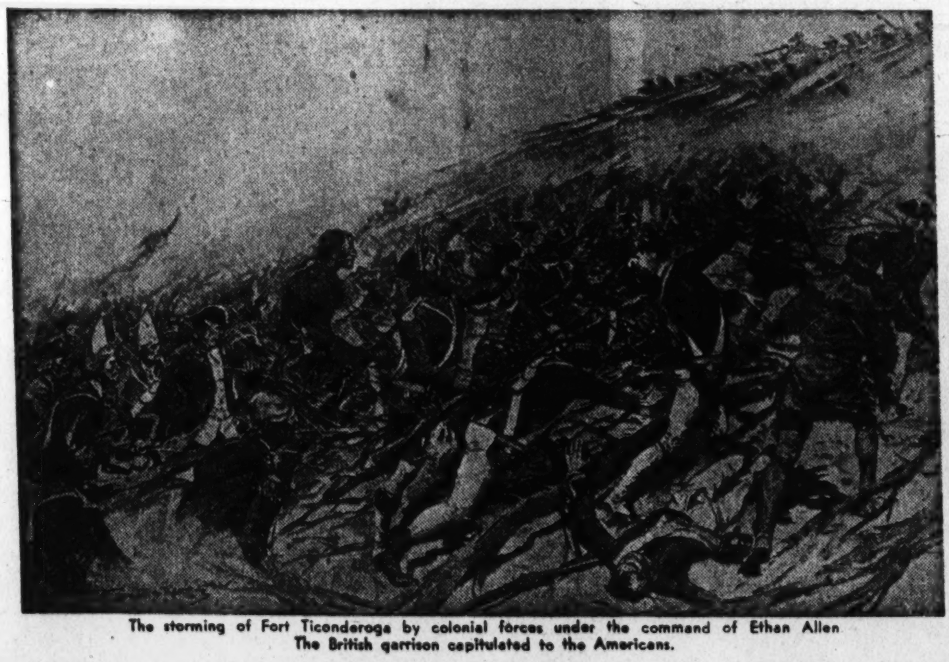
May 8

1660—Charles II. was proclaimed king of England on the restoration of the royalists after the breakdown of the Cromwellian commonwealth. Charles was accepted as king by the convention parliament on his Declaration of Breda, in which he promised amnesty to his foes. He was crowned April 23, 1661. He was born May 29, 1630, and died Feb. 6, 1685.

1824—William Walker, soldier of fortune, physician, lawyer, and journalist, was born in Nashville, Tenn. In 1854 he led an ill-fated filibustering expedition into Sonora, Mexico, and in 1855 started with 56 followers on his first expedition into Nicaragua. He made himself master of Nicaragua as commander of its troops and set up a federation of Central American states. He returned to the United States, later to lead several other expeditions to Central America. In August, 1860, he landed in Honduras and was seized by British naval authorities, who turned him over to the Honduran authorities. He was executed Sept. 12, 1860.



The storming of Fort Ticonderoga by colonial forces under the command of Ethan Allen The British garrison capitulated to the Americans.

May 9

1883—Stephanus Johannes Paulus Kruger (Oom Paul) became president for the first time of the Transvaal republic in South Africa. He was re-elected in 1888, 1893, and 1898 and was president of the Transvaal during the Boer war. He was born at Colesberg, Cape Colony, Oct. 10, 1825, and died in Switzerland July 14, 1904.

May 10

1775—Ethan Allen, leader of the "Green Mountain Boys," captured Fort Ticonderoga from the British "in the name of the great Jehovah and the Continental congress."

1865—Jefferson Davis, the president of the Confederacy, was captured near Irwinville, Ga. He was imprisoned at Fort Monroe, under threat of trial for treason, until May 4, 1867, when he was liberated in bail.

1876—The Centennial exposition at Philadelphia was officially opened. It marked the completion of the first century of American independence.

May 11

1647—Peter Stuyvesant arrived at New Amsterdam (now New York) to begin his duties as the director of New Netherlands. He was born in Scherpenzeel, in southern Friesland, in 1592, and died in 1672 on his farm called the Bouwerie, from which the present Bowery in New York took its name.

May 12

1789—The Society of St. Tammany, or Columbian order, was founded in New York by William Mooney, an upholsterer, to resist the influences of the aristocratic classes in the new republic of the United States. The officers were given Indian titles, and the society obtained its first charter in 1805. Tammany Hall, the New York Democratic organization, was an offshoot of the society.

May 13

1842—Sir Arthur Seymour Sullivan, famous English composer, was born in Lambeth, the son of an Irish bandmaster. He became acquainted with W. S. Gilbert in 1871, and together they wrote and produced a number of operas and operettas. They dissolved partnership in 1892. Sir Arthur wrote the famous song, "The Lost Chord," and the tune of "Onward, Christian Soldiers," as well as many other compositions. He died in London Nov. 22, 1900. Among the best known of the Gilbert and Sullivan operas are "H. M. S. Pinafore," "The Pirates of Penzance," and "The Mikado."

1607—Jamestown, the first British settlement in America, was established on a peninsula in the James river in Virginia, 40 miles above the present site of Norfolk.

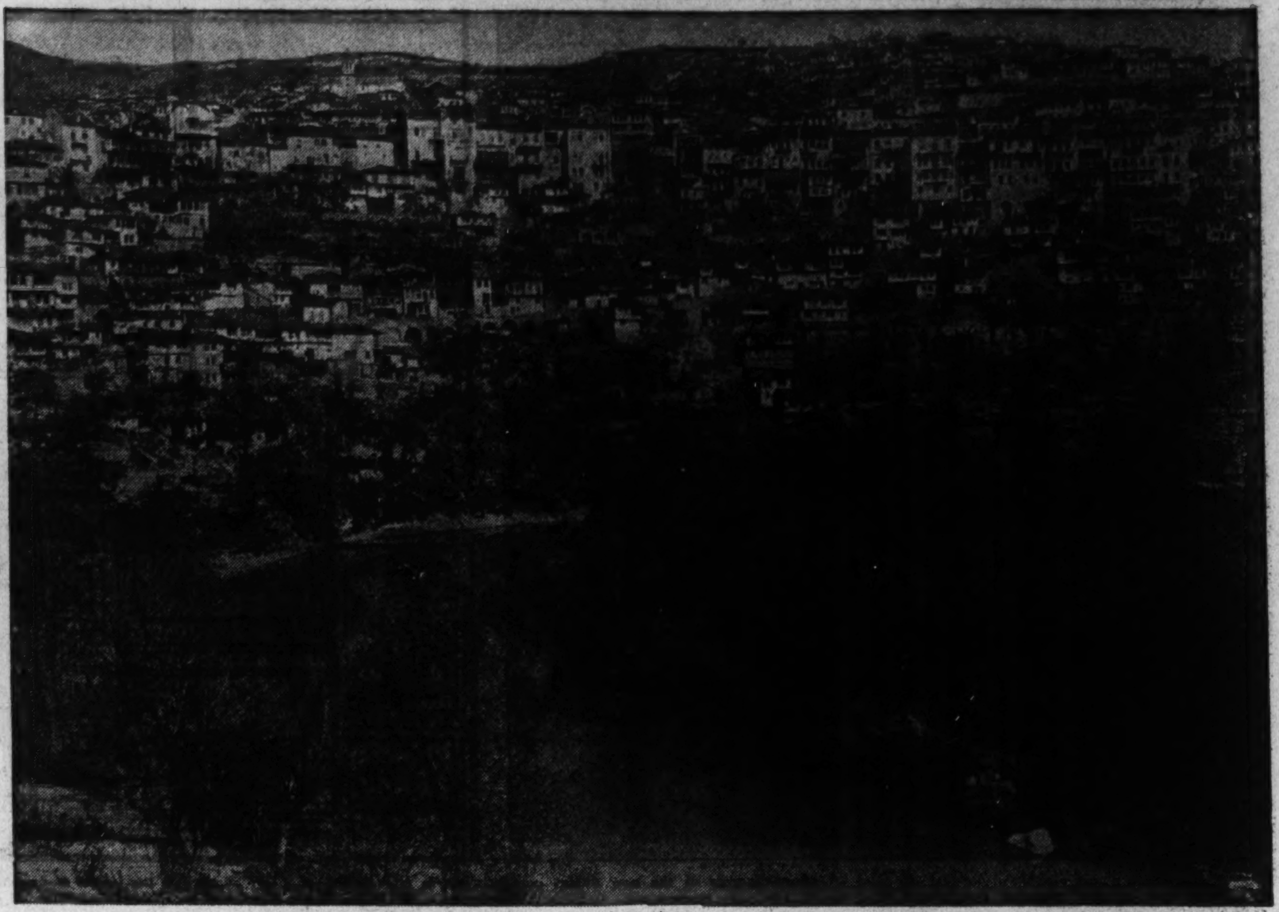
May 14

1610—Henry IV., king of France, was assassinated by a religious fanatic, Francois Ravaillac. Henry was born at Pau Dec. 14, 1553, and became king of Navarre in 1572.

1796—Dr. Edward Jenner, an English physician, performed the first vaccination for smallpox on an 8-year-old boy.

1804—The Lewis and Clark expedition started from St. Louis for the mouth of the Columbia river. It was the first expedition to cross the continent within the limits of the United States. The leaders were Meriwether Lewis and William Clark, the youngest brother of George Rogers Clark.

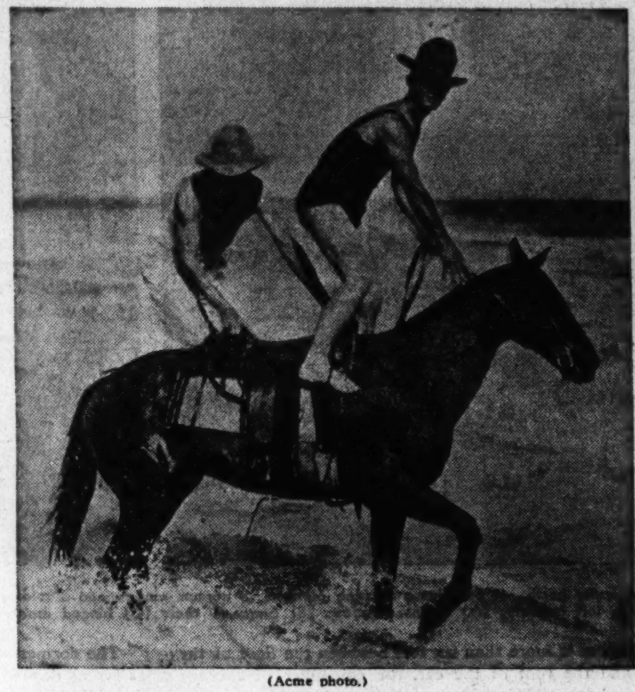
Trnovo, Bulgaria's Terraced City



(Acme photo.)

UPON coming within sight of Trnovo, in Bulgaria, travelers sometimes get the impression that they are looking upon a city of skyscrapers. But that is an optical illusion brought about by the fact that the houses are built on terraces on the sharply rising walls of the valley. When the structures are studied individually they may be found to be little different from houses which are erected in America. Yet the city as a whole creates an old world atmosphere. Tucked away in its little valley, it is sheltered from the storms which sweep the uplands.

Riding the Surf on a Pony



(Acme photo.)

IN the far off South sea islands the native fishermen often ride the surf in their fragile outrigger canoes. In Hawaii many expert swimmers obtain a great thrill from riding the surf on boards designed for that purpose. They swim far to sea, maneuver their surf boards to the crest of a huge roller, and then shoot landward at a terrific rate, either standing or lying on their boards. Adventurous folks at Miami, Fla., have gone in for a new kind of surf riding, after watching the antics of a group of cowboys from the west. The new surf riding equipment is a pony and a saddle. In the picture are two cowboys exhibiting the latest brand of surf riding. They ride out to sea on their pony, swim the animal into a tremendous wave, and then let the wave sweep them and their mount to shore.

A Midget Mill in Action

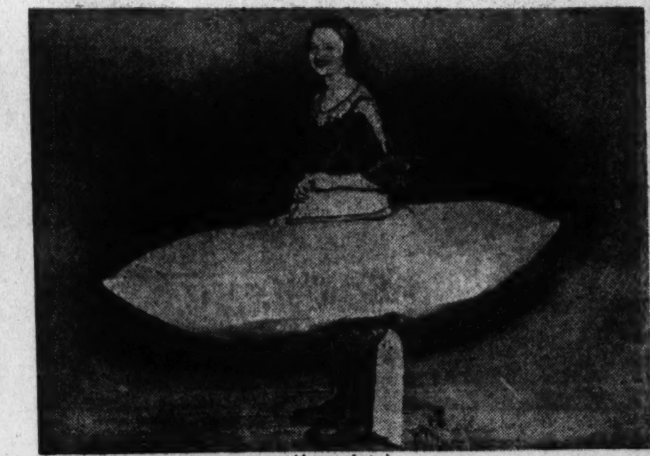
IT is difficult to realize that a complete flour mill can be constructed within a narrow space only eight feet long, yet pictured here is a miniature mill constructed within those meager limits which does everything a big mill does, and more, too. This tiny mill, set up in the laboratories of a firm of millers at Evansville, Ind., duplicates every step in the intricate production of cake flour. This little plant can grind flour 27 times finer than the ordinary product, and is used by food scientists in running tests requiring small batches of the product.

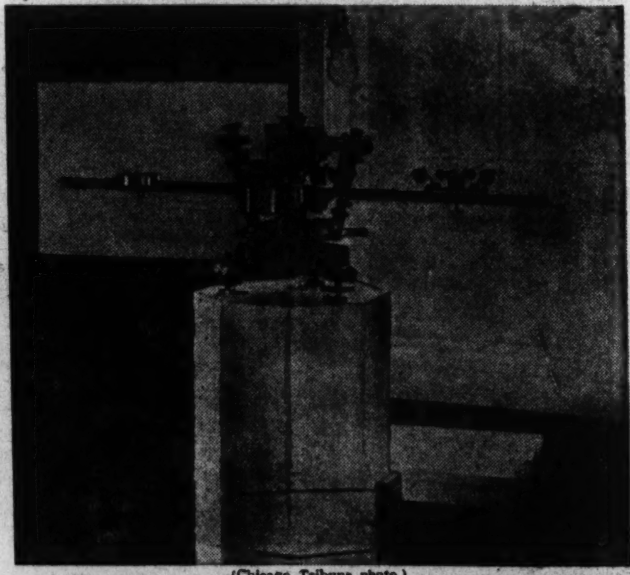
Every Angler His Own Boat



(Acme photo.)

THERE is always something new to catch the eye or the fancy of the fisherman. And fishermen always are looking for something new, willing to spend their money on freak tackle with which to angle for the denizens of the streams and lakes. Illustrated here is the latest in costumes for the disciple of Izaak Walton. It consists of a pair of waterproof boots, to which fins are attached, and a pair of trousers which take the shape of a boat. The fisherman can don this outfit and wade into a stream after trout. When he gets to the point at which the water is too deep for wading he simply propels himself by kicking. The boat-like trousers keep him afloat. The young woman in the picture demonstrated the outfit at a patent exposition in Philadelphia.

Science Farthest North



(Chicago Tribune photo.)

HERE is a corner of the laboratory in the northernmost astronomical observatory in the world. It is located at Tromso, Norway, and was established for the purpose of studying and photographing the aurora borealis. From a point of vantage so near the pole it is possible to make very accurate observations of some of nature's most spectacular pageantry. The instrument illustrated here is used for making measurements of magnetic forces. There are ten of these instruments in the laboratory, all supported on solid marble columns to make for greater accuracy. The observatory was financed by contributions from the Rockefeller fund and from the Norwegian government.

SURVIVORS of the MASSACRE

The Story of the Countless Shaggy Herds Which Once Roamed the Plains

At left: His Majesty the Bison. He is the patriarch of the herd, one of the few remaining herds of bisons, or buffaloes, which once roamed the western plains by millions.

At right: A cow buffalo with her newly born calf. The little chap first saw the light of day in a pen of the New York Zoological garden.

How the Majestic American Buffalo Has Been Saved fron Extinction

By John A. Menaugh

SCATTERED here and there in national and state parks, upon private ranches, and within zoological gardens are a few straggling herds of American bisons, or buffaloes, as they are better known. The total of individual animals in these groups can be numbered in hundreds. They are all that is left; they are the remnant of the millions of buffaloes which roamed the western plains of North America two generations ago.

Once at the very verge of extermination, the species now presents an excellent chance of being preserved. Special care is being taken of the remaining herds of buffaloes, scientific feeding and breeding are carried on to save the creatures from extinction, and it is possible that a thousand years from now our own descendants may be able to gaze upon the descendants of those shaggy bovine giants that dotted the plains when Kansas was the frontier.

The buffalo is a noble beast. The ponderous bull, with his huge forequarters, his thick mane, his stout curving horns, and his bearded face, actually is regal in appearance. He is the most imposing of all the wild creatures of North America. His great shaggy hump stands much higher than the withers of a big horse. The average weight of a mature bull is about 1,800 pounds, but individual specimens have been known to reach a ton in weight, and the record, according to scientific authority, is 2,220 pounds. Though the buffalo is not as tall as the moose, it exceeds that animal greatly in bulk.

The bison, or buffalo, represents a group of the ox tribe, distinguished from the other species by a greater breadth and convexity of forehead, superior length of limb, and longer spinal processes of the dorsal vertebræ, which, with the powerful muscles attached for the support of the massive head, form a protuberance or hump in the shoulders. The animal has fourteen pairs of ribs, whereas the common ox has only thirteen. Both the adult male and the adult female have manes, though that of the male is much thicker and heavier. The adult animals are blackish brown in color on the forequarters, shading off to a lighter brown on the hindquarters. The bison calves usually are much lighter in color than the full grown animals, and resemble very much the calves of domestic cattle. The hindquarters of the buffalo are weak and small in comparison to the forequarters.

In the herd there usually is one great old bull which is the leader, though all of the full grown bulls assume the duties of protecting the herd. When there is an alarm the cows and calves group themselves in the center of the herd, while the bulls form about the weaker animals in compact lines for the purpose of defense. In the presence of man, however, the entire herd usually takes to flight.

When white men first penetrated the wilds of North America they found the American bison in great numbers. Though there is a species of bison in Europe, the explorers generally referred to the animal of this country as the buffalo. Droves of buffaloes were found in the thickly wooded regions of what are now New York and Pennsylvania, and beside the salt licks were countless thousands of skeletons of the creatures. The buffalo even was observed as far south as Florida. While the buffalo generally is looked upon as an animal of the plains, there is plenty of evidence that it roamed through the entire eastern portion of the United States, its trails being common within the forested regions. According to old accounts of hunters who knew both the animal of the forests and his cousin of the plains, the woodland buffalo was slightly larger than the plains type.

Early hunters preyed upon the buffalo, slaying it for its meat and its hide. Gradually, as the settlers moved westward, the buffaloes were killed out or retreated before the dangers of the deadly rifle. When the homeseekers and trappers reached the prairies of Illinois there still were great herds ranging over those wide expanses. By 1830 it is said the buffalo virtually had been extirpated east of the Mississippi.

The real massacre of the buffalo, the killing off of the animal by millions, took place on the plains west of the Mississippi. Though the Indians had been killing the animal for food and skins for centuries, its natural increase had stayed abreast of the slaughter. The white man was ruthless. After the raids of the early trappers had reduced the beaver almost to the vanishing point, the hide of the buffalo became the basis for barter. A trader would allow an Indian a pint of frontier whisky for a buffalo hide—a pint of raw alcohol and water mixed. Inhabitants of all of the early frontier towns depended almost wholly on the buffalo for food. When the first railroads were constructed across the plains the armies of workmen were fed on buffalo meat. Meat hunters were employed by cross-country caravans, by the people of the towns, and by the railroads. The buffalo was shot down by the thousands and millions. Only a choice bit of the meat from the hump of the animal, its hindquarters, and its tongue were saved for human food, the remainder being left to the wolves which followed the buffalo herds in huge numbers.

Buffalo hunters became quite expert in the slaying of the beasts, individuals often shooting down more than a hundred each on every day of the hunt. The old Sharp rifle, a heavy caliber weapon, was the favorite gun of the white hunter, who either shot the animals from a blind or slew them as he rode beside them on his horse. Horses became almost as expert as men in the hunting, some being trained to gallop beside the fleeing animals until they were dropped one by one by the hunter's bullets.

Dinner time for the tiny buffalo calf. The buffalo mother appears as patient as a domestic cow while her youngster feeds. The photograph was taken some time ago in the buffalo run at the Lincoln park zoo in Chicago.

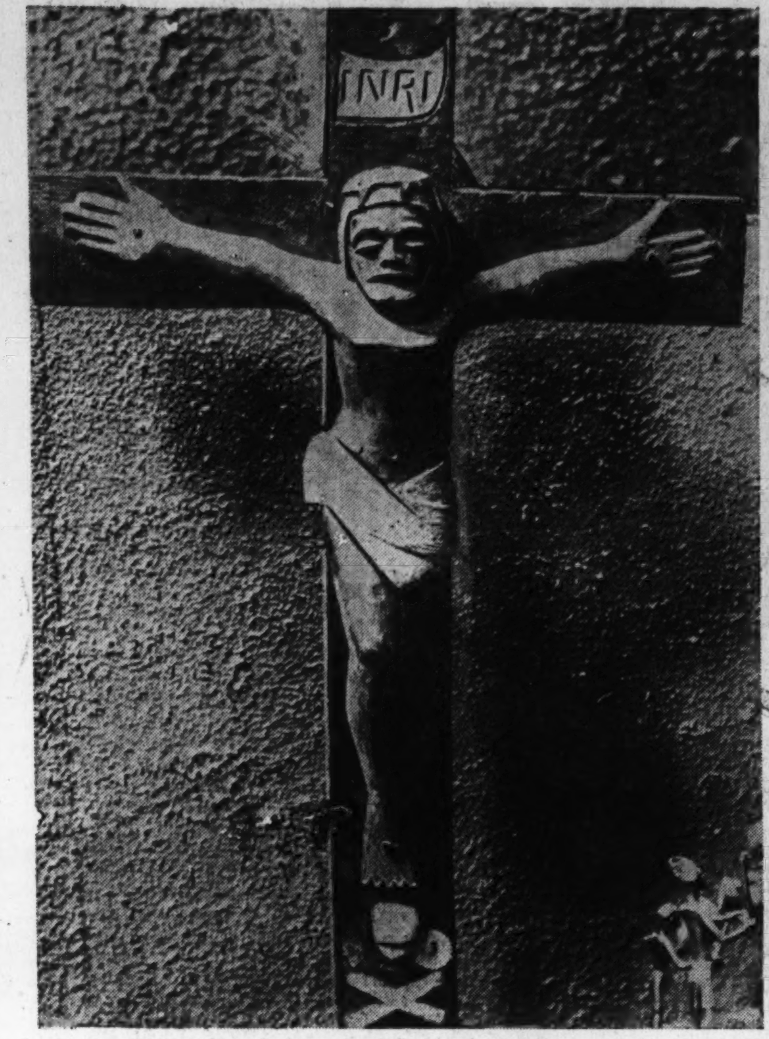
A surviving herd of the shaggy legions. These buffaloes live just as did the countless millions which roamed the plains two generations ago, though they no longer are preyed upon by hunters.

The Indians killed the buffaloes with their bows and arrows. They rode beside the terror-stricken animals and discharged their arrows into the beasts' bodies at a range of less than ten feet. If the arrow did not kill instantly, the Indian would ride close to the buffalo, grasp the part of the arrow still protruding, and push the missile farther into the vitals of the animal.

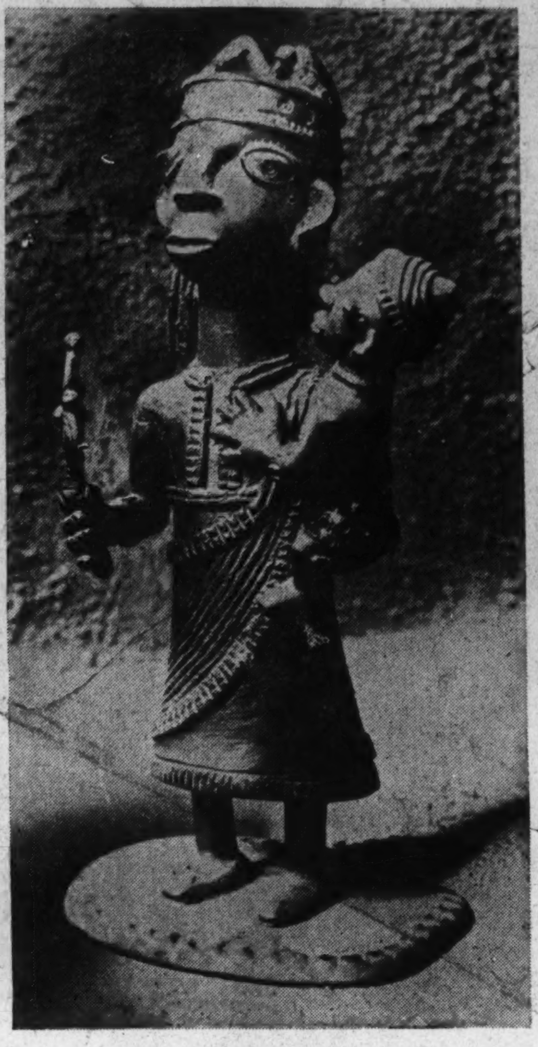
Rapidly the buffalo disappeared before such wholesale slaughter staged by the professional hunters. When the demand for buffalo meat declined the hide hunters became active and pushed their relentless war upon the remaining herds. Buffalo hides were in demand for carriage robes, and there was hardly an owner of a buggy or of a sleigh in the entire country fifty years ago who did not possess one or more of the hairy robes. Even the wolfers, those men who followed and poisoned the wolves of the plains in order to obtain their hides to sell to the fur buyers, slew the buffalo for use as bait. One buffalo carcass impregnated with poison often was fatal to as many as thirty wolves.

On the vast ranges of the buffalo, which stretched from the Rio Grande at the south to the Great Bear lake at the north, the almost complete passing of the herds was swift and deadly. By the early eighties the massacre came to an end, with virtually every one of the wild buffaloes exterminated. Here and there some farseeing man had preserved a herd. One old plainsman, known as "Buffalo" Jones, even experimented with the crossing of the buffalo with domestic cattle. The hybrid offspring he called catalo. Today the thin herds of buffaloes, protected within parks or owned by private ranchers, are what is left of the countless millions that roamed the west seemingly only yesterday. They are the survivors of one of the worst massacres of history.

Sacred Art of a Savage School



An African Negro artist's conception of Christ on the cross.



(Acme photos.) Another sacred image by an African sculptor.

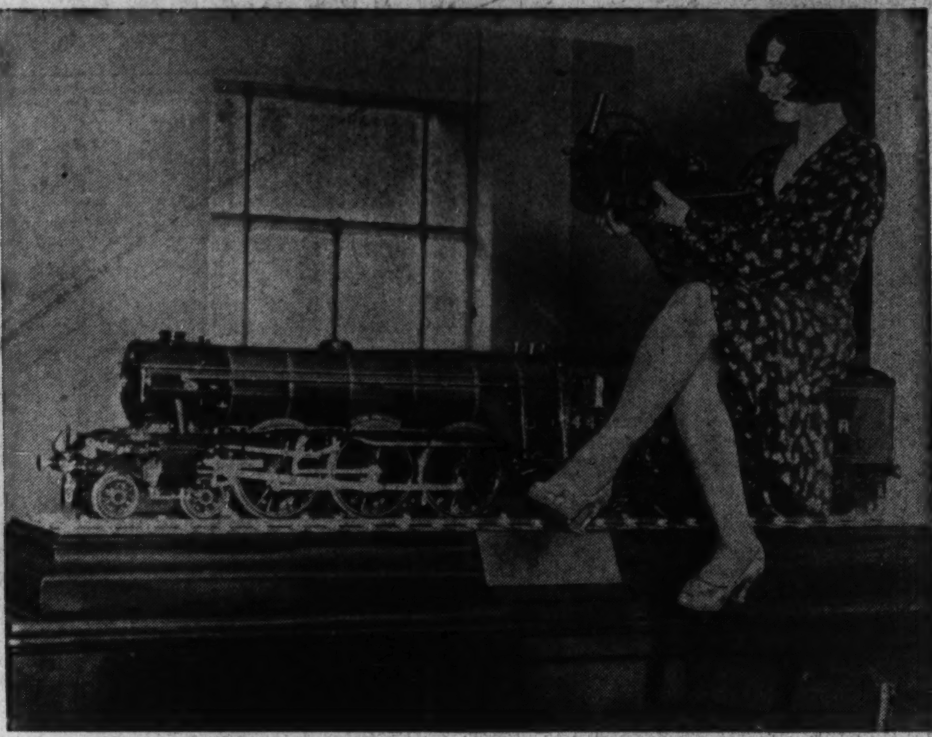
FOR countless generations the African jungle man's idea of an impressive religious ceremony has been the rattling of a handful of dried peas within a calabash. To the ignorant black man the booming of the tribal drums has been a far nobler sound than the chiming of cathedral bells. Prancing witch doctors, in cloaks of hyrax skins, have been held in profound awe, while voodooism has kept innumerable millions within its vicious grip. Fetish worship and human sacrifice have gone hand in hand in a land where comely maidens are bartered for sheep and cattle and where grandmothers are tossed into murky rivers to feed the crocodiles.

It is not surprising that the art of superstition-ridden people should be quite primitive. The simple savage Negro of Africa for centuries has fashioned idols of wood and stone. He has deified the sun and the moon, the rain and the clouds, and the rivers and the lakes, and carved grotesque gods before which he has danced in delirium or knelt in silence. He has painted in raw colors on rocks and within caves, and has decorated his war shields with horrible pictures, intended to frighten his enemies and hypnotize the ferocious beasts of the jungles. Despite the encroachments of white men here and there within his territories, the native African still is only approximately at the level of the stone age man of prehistoric times.

It is true that there are within Africa a large number of kinky haired Negroes who have been converted to the creeds of the foreigners. The Arab slavers and ivory traders have carried Mohammedanism into some of the deepest reaches of the jungle, and the Christian missionaries have established chapels in remote posts along the great rivers of the dark continent, but the converts are few in comparison to the great hordes of savage people who still worship the idols of their ancestors.

Some of the idol sculptors of Africa, it appears, have been taken within the folds of the Christian churches and have applied their art to the creation of sacred images. The accompanying pictures reveal an African artist's idea of Christ on the cross and Mother Mary with the child Jesus. The images were exhibited recently at Paris and come from French West Africa, a hot and steaming country, where life is raw and simple.

How Models Tell Story of Rail Progress



(Acme photo.)

PERCHED on top of a model of a modern locomotive, the young woman pictured here is holding in her hands a model of a steam engine used on a railroad of England as early as 1814. The two models were among hundreds exhibited recently at an exposition in London. The larger of the two models reproduces faithfully one of the big steam engines now pulling trains in England. The contrast of the models shows what great advances have been made in railway locomotives in 118 years.

A Herd of Young Farm Power Units

DESPITE the fact that this is said to be the machine age, and in face of the increasing use of the automobile in the rural districts, there still are thousands of farmers who continue to produce their own power units on their farms. Agriculturists have learned that there are many things that the horse still can do better and more cheaply than the tractor. For one thing, the farmer can raise his own feed for his horses, but gasoline can be produced only by the laying down of cash. Pictured here are seventy colts at the Aledo (Ill.) county fair, ranging in ages from three to six months.

Victory for the Pedestrian

(Acme photo.)

THE first victory of the pedestrian over the automobile has been won in London. A new system of traffic lights has been installed in the British capital which gives the pedestrian a "break" in his war with his natural enemy, the automobile driver. Heretofore in London the pedestrian has had to wait to cross the street until there came a break in the traffic or until a deliberate automatic green light granted him right of way. Now, under the new system, he merely walks up to the new signal, presses a button, flashes a red light against vehicular traffic, and walks across the street. The light changes automatically after he has had time to negotiate the crossing. A similar device has been put into use in some American cities.

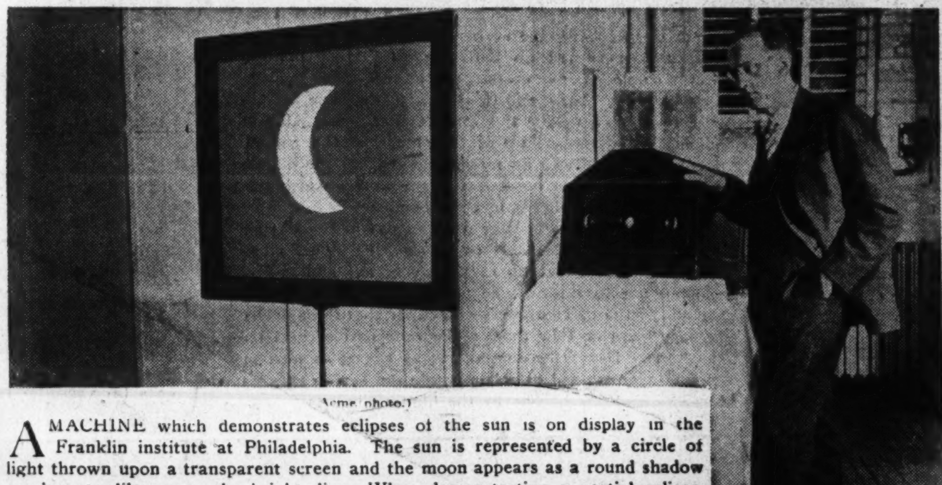
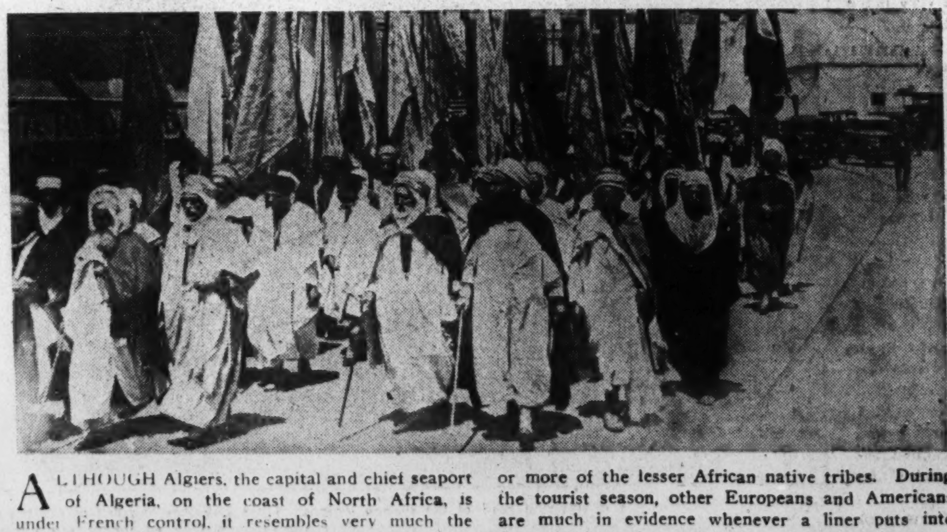
Re-enacting the Drama of the Sky



(Acme photo.)

A MACHINE which demonstrates eclipses of the sun is on display in the Franklin institute at Philadelphia. The sun is represented by a circle of light thrown upon a transparent screen and the moon appears as a round shadow moving steadily across the bright disc. When demonstrating a partial eclipse, the shadow moves in such a direction that a crescent of light remains visible. In the case of a total eclipse, the sun appears as a ring of light surrounding the dark body of the moon. In the accompanying photograph one of the assistant directors of the institute is shown operating the machine, which is known as the eclipsoscope.

Algerian Chiefs in Celebration



ALTHOUGH Algiers, the capital and chief seaport of Algeria, on the coast of North Africa, is under French control, it resembles very much the cities of the orient with its mosques and extensive native quarters. Algiers is a cosmopolitan city. In its streets one can see at any time French soldiers and civilians, Arabs, Berbers, and members of a score or more of the lesser African native tribes. During the tourist season, other Europeans and Americans are much in evidence whenever a liner puts into port. The accompanying picture shows a group of Algerian chieftains parading through a street of Algiers with banners on the occasion of a native celebration.

Gift Day for Roman Police

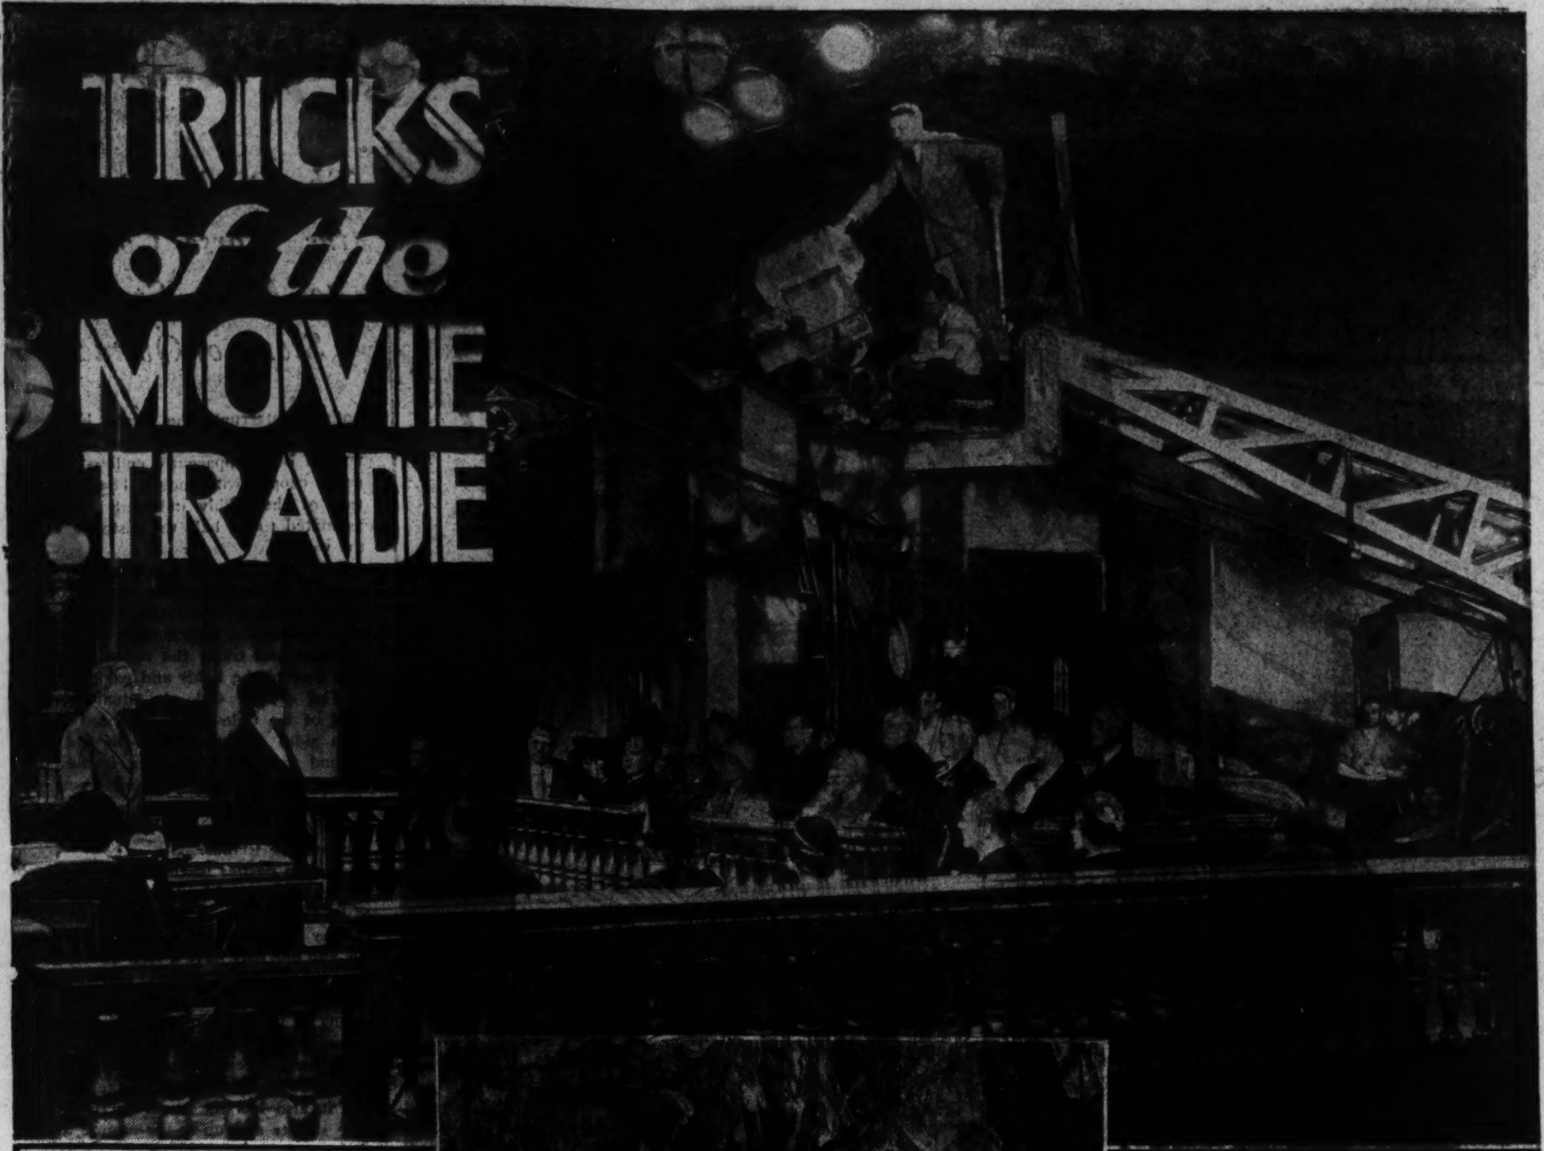
ON certain festivals the police of Rome are accustomed to receive a great variety of gifts from passing motorists. Instead of following the American custom of giving cash remembrances, the Romans bestow bottles of wine, cakes, or cigarets upon their traffic officers. It is an old custom which originated long before the days of the automobile. Wealthy Roman citizens of other days would drive down the streets in their handsome carriages, handing out presents. Now that one of the most important duties of the police is the directing of traffic, they receive contributions from the occupants of motor cars instead of carriages. The accompanying photograph illustrates a typical holiday transaction in a Roman thoroughfare.

New Job for the Motorcycle

(Acme photo.)

THE army motorcycle has a new job. At the French military camp near Versailles, where this picture was taken, officials have conducted a series of tests to determine every possible use to which the motorcycle may be put in time of war. Here is one of the machines fitted out for transporting gasoline to airplanes.

TRICKS of the MOVIE TRADE



The director and cameraman both occupy the stand at the peak of the crane to take this courtroom scene.

By Marjorie Trent

WHEN Mr. Scribbler, the scenario writer, has taken the novel which paid this and next year's rent of Mr. Best Seller's Park avenue penthouse, and hacked, switched, contorted—and, it must be admitted, sometimes distorted—its plot into a vehicle for presentation on the screen: when Mr. Megaphone, the director, has assembled his cast; when Mr. Props and Mr. Carpenter and Mme. Mode have done their part in dressing settings and players—then come two Aladdins, the art director and the chief cameraman, who, rubbing the lamp of their combined ingenuity, summon forth the genii of "trick shots."

The "trick shot" of the movies is a device whereby you of the audience are transported in an instant from a seat in the topmost gallery to a prone position at the feet of the star, whisked thence to a place high in the flies, and in another split second suspended miraculously over the heads of a group of rumba dancers.

This technique, impossible to the stage, is employed constantly in the production of motion pictures for several reasons. Not only are the effects achieved bizarre and unusual; there are two additional major motives.

First, by this method the spectator views the action from the most advantageous and effective point; second, the "trick shot" serves as a pictorial punctuation of the theme, changes the pace or rhythm of the action, and adds an artistic motif to the scheme.

The earliest of these tricks was the use of the contracting and expanding circular shutter on the camera, which "blacked out" or "irised in" a scene or a close-up. Among those tricks which followed were the fade-in and fade-out, the fuzzing or melting close-up, and the superimposition of films which permitted one player to appear simultaneously in two roles.

Lately the carpenter and electrician have been called upon to aid in the production of "trick shots" by huge, intricate, and sometimes mobile conveyances, from which the cameraman can produce the most difficult and otherwise impossible effects. In some studios a traveling crane is used to convey the camera from one high shot to another, and in making many close-ups the camera is placed on the floor pointing upward in such a position that it must be operated electrically, by remote control.

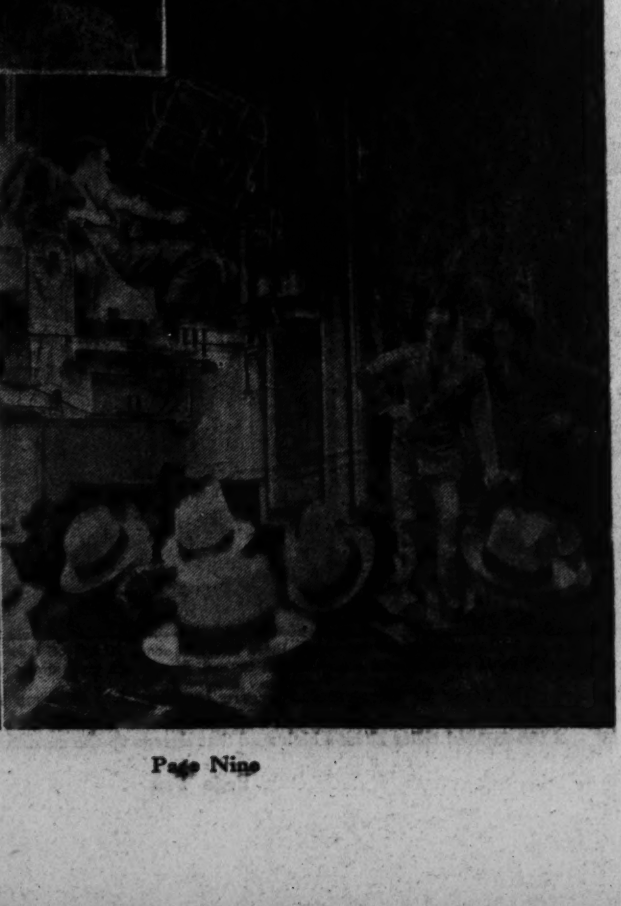
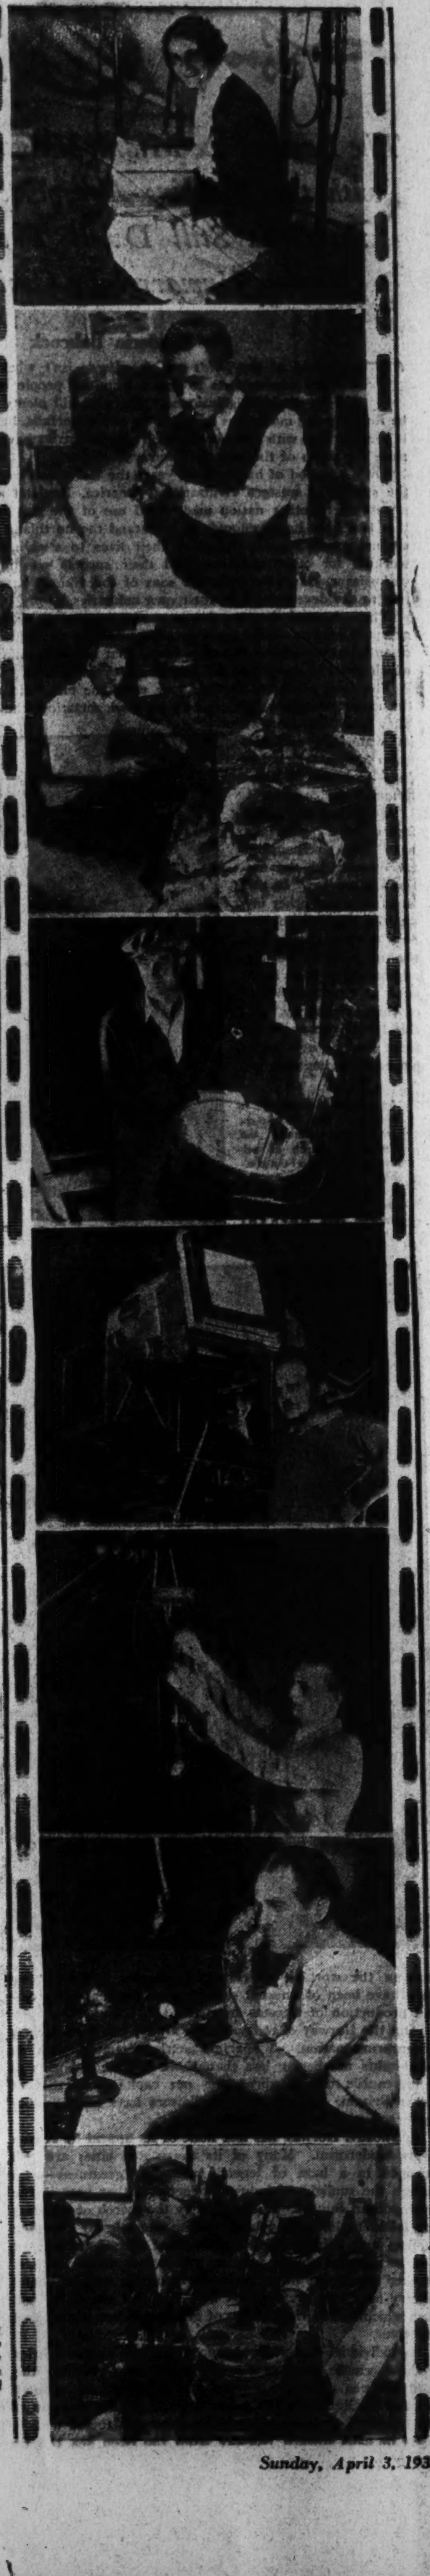
At right: The star listens to his director's instructions while the operator of the camera gets a close-up from the traveling crane swung over the heads of the actors in the foreground.





A prima donna among the unsung stars of the silver screen is the script clerk. If Harold Handsome wore a striped tie in the last shot and displays a polka dotted one in this one when in the action of the play he would have had no opportunity to make the change, it is she who catches the flaw and calls it to the attention of the busy director.

An artist who plies his paints upon the faces of filmdom's great and near-great alike is the makeup man. Indeed, if we may believe the overcynical commentators upon the motion pictures, there are cases in which the face that charms moving vast audiences to rapturous sighs, is often not the work of nature but of this man behind-the-mascara.

Junkman, historian, hoarder of odds and ends, the man who can produce, seemingly miraculously the apparently nonexistent, is the property man. He can tell you what kind of sword Wellington wore at Waterloo, what manner of gavel John Hancock thumped upon the rostrum in Independence hall . . . and, what is more, he can and will get copies of them.

They sometimes call him the juicer, or the gaffer. He is the electrician—first aid in the production of trick shots, the man whose artistry with lights produces effects weird, beautiful, bizarre and—word precious to the man with the riding breeches, boots, and megaphone—artistic. He can make Lady Clara Vere de Vere photograph like an angel or a harpy.

This is the man before whose eyes and machine stars rise and shine or fall to oblivion. The cameraman is the first link between the actor on the set and you in your comfortable seat "out front." No matter how haughty, how upstage, the star of the moment happens to be, there are nods and becks and wreathed smiles for this gentleman . . . or else.

The boomer, field officer for the mixer, is the hard working member of the movie community who regulates the microphone in every movie sequence. If he knows his work . . . and he always does . . . the voice you hear is a human voice and not the rumbling of Hendrik Hudson's crew playing nine-pins with Rip Van Winkle or the squeak of a baby mouse with laryngitis.

Here is the boomer's superior officer, whose headquarters is a little booth above and beside the set. He is the mixer, who adjusts the volume of the voices or sounds and their pitch, so that in co-operation with the boomer he can secure a record on the sound track of the film which duplicates the sound vibrations on the set itself.

This serious looking young man is the cutter, whose task is to edit the film after it has been made. Many an extra, many a minor player, and some of major importance have little or nothing, aside from their pay checks, to show for their parts in a film after this man and his assistants have cut and spliced and deleted.

Old Norway Passes

The Land of the Midnight Sun Keeps Step with the Machine Age, Even Though the Gods Still Dwell There Amid Beauty Unmarred by Civilization

The Restless Spirit of the Norse Continues to Make Stepping Stones of Obstacles

By Frederic Babcock

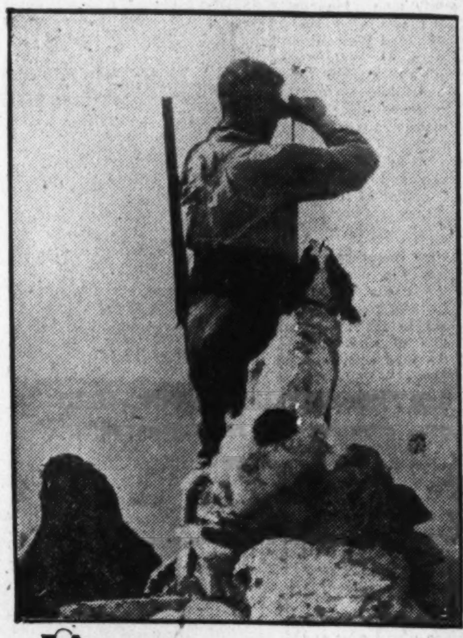
THE land of the fjelds and the fjords isn't what it used to be. The traveler who expects to find a primitive people in a primitive country will be quickly disillusioned. There is still plenty of rugged beauty to be found in the mountains and glaciers and waterfalls, but Norway as a whole is keeping step with the machine age. Its industries have made mighty strides since the dawn of the twentieth century.

Over a period of hundreds of years the Norsemen were material factors in the spread of western civilization. America, England and its colonies, and almost every other nation made good use of the grit and energy of a race that had been hardy enough to withstand the northland winters. Norwegian engineers and scientists devoted their lives to studying, experimenting, and working for other countries, and their success was in keeping with their enthusiasm. More recently the sons of the vikings have turned their attention to the development of their own industries.

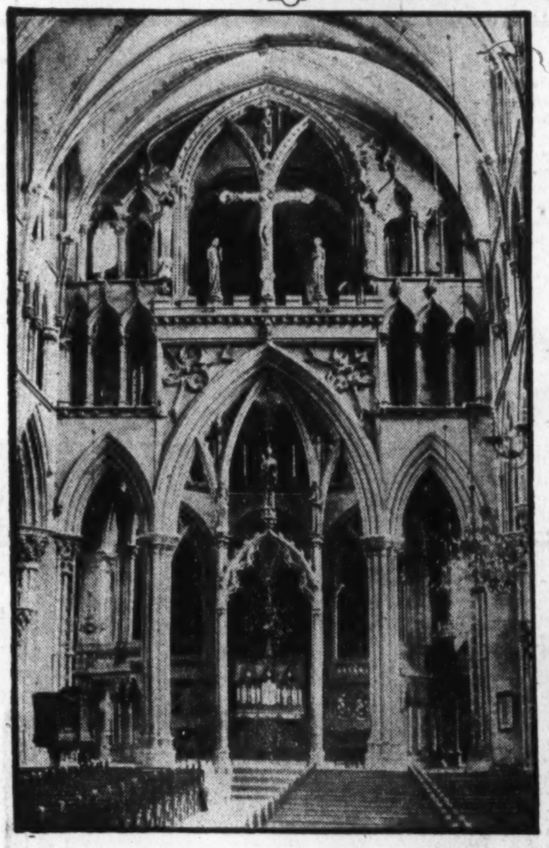
These men of the new day began to see and think beyond the realms of accepted opinion. They appreciated the natural difficulties in the way of their commercial expansion, but they found that in those difficulties were elements which could be turned to the benefit of inventive men.

The chief obstacles in their way were the mountain ranges. But though the mountains were barriers to easy transportation, they had their purpose. They gave to Norway its waterfalls and the water power which has done so much to revolutionize the country.

More than any other factor the waterfalls have been responsible for opening up the nation's resources. In the wood pulp and other industries they are the direct driving power for the machinery, and in addition they have been used in the generation of cheap electricity. In this latter connection they have not only played a leading role in making the working of certain businesses profitable but they have been of unusual service in an unusual industry—the production of nitrates from the air.



At right: Hunting in Norway. The Vikings who once roamed the seas in search of adventure and plunder have given way to the business men who tramp the fields in search of smaller and perhaps fairer game.



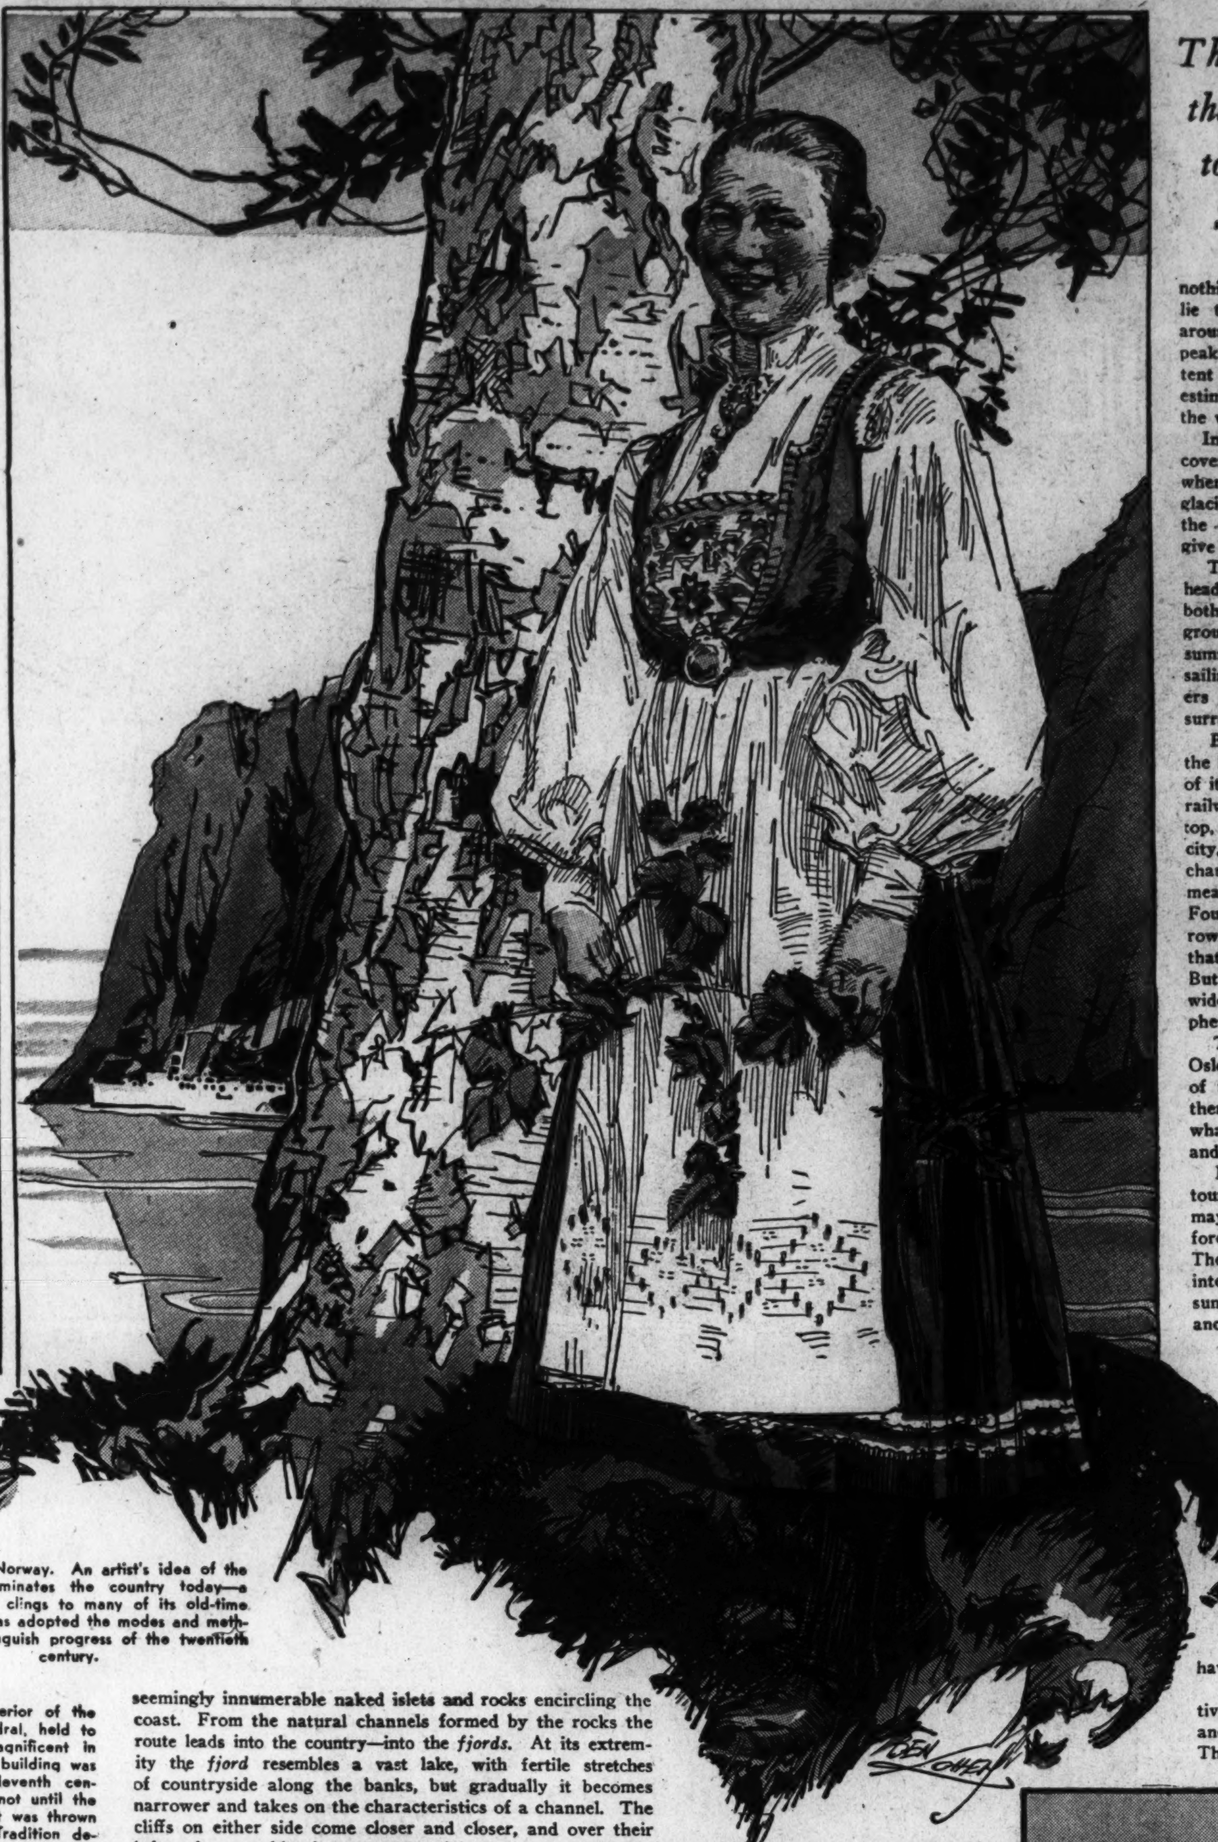
At left: The interior of the Trondhjem cathedral, held to be the most magnificent in Scandinavia. The building was begun in the eleventh century, but it was not until the fourteenth that it was thrown open for use. Tradition decrees that the kings of Norway must be crowned here.

But the Norway of today is, as it always has been, largely a seafaring nation. A sparsely settled country, with its inhabitants numbering less than three million, it boasts of a mercantile marine surpassing per capita even that of Great Britain. Leif Ericson's followers have carried their explorations to all parts of the world.

Scenically, Norway has lost none of its appeal by reason of its modernism. Many of its towns and cities are still wrapped in a haze of legends and past greatness—even though the sunlight of industry penetrates that haze in the metropolitan centers. In the country the march of progress has failed to lessen the lure. Along the lengthy coastline hamlets and fishing villages show that the sustenance of a large part of the population still comes from the sea. Further inland, in deep, secluded mountain valleys, stand solitary huts and gray cabins with roofs of thatch or sod from which spring vivid blades of grass and even bushes and tiny trees.

So individual and so pronounced are the characteristics of these remote sections that one can't help recalling the word pictures painted by Ibsen and Bjornson, of another day, and by Sigrid Undset, Johan Bojer, and Knut Hamsun, of more recent times. The mood is often somber, but it is a somberness tinged with sublimity.

As he sails toward Norway from the open sea the traveler is confronted by seemingly innumerable naked islets and rocks encircling the coast. From the natural channels formed by the rocks the route leads into the country—into the fjords. At its extremity the fjord resembles a vast lake, with fertile stretches of countryside along the banks, but gradually it becomes narrower and takes on the characteristics of a channel. The cliffs on either side come closer and closer, and over their lofty edges tumble the cataracts, giving a touch of life to an otherwise somewhat somber scene.



The spirit of Norway. An artist's idea of the type that dominates the country today—a type that still clings to many of its old-time customs, yet has adopted the modes and methods that distinguish progress of the twentieth century.

A Lapp family outside its home, in northern Norway. There are still some 20,000 of these Mongolian people in that part of the country. The roofs of their huts are of thatch or sod, from which grow grass, bushes, and scrub trees.

The fjords of the west country are imposing, but they can also be oppressive. So the voyager finds refreshment in leaving the steamer and climbing through a sun-sprayed valley along a high road that zigzags up the mountain to heights where nothing interrupts the view. Far below lie the valley and the fjord, while all around is an apparently endless chain of peaks capped with snow. The actual extent of the highly indented coastline is estimated to be half the distance around the world.

Inland the country slopes up to heather-covered moors between narrow inlets where foaming waterfalls and gleaming glaciers line the jagged walls of rock. In the east and south the mountain ranges give way to the fields and woods.

The capital, Oslo, is situated at the head of the Oslo fjord. Wooded hills on both sides and the valley in the background form an entrancing frame; on a summer's day the inner fjord teems with sailing boats, motor launches, and steamers plying between the harbors and the surrounding islands.

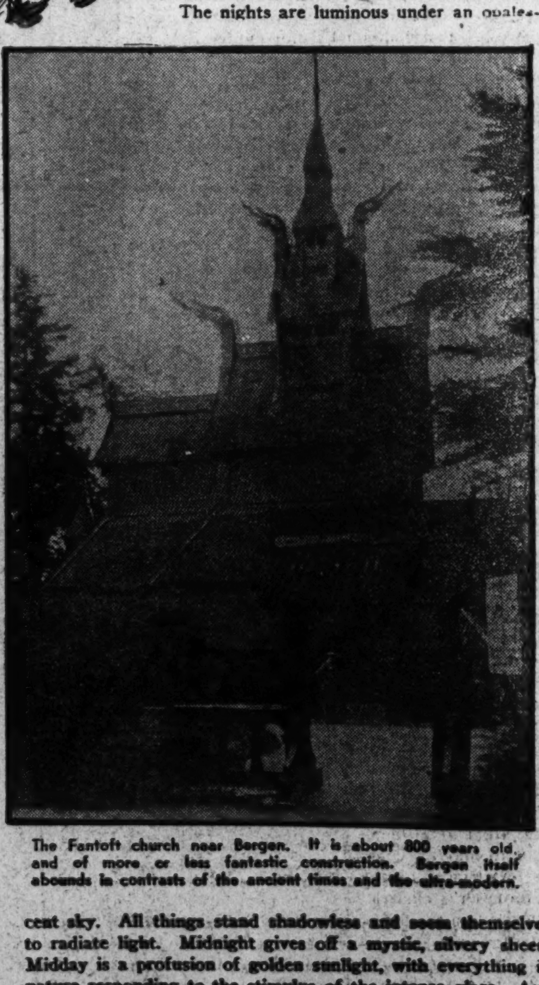
Bergen nestles in the idyllic setting of the hollow formed by the horseshoe curve of its seven hills. A trip up the funicular railway to the station at the mountain top, and one may have a view of the quaint city, its encircling ranges, and the ever-changing sea. The name of the city itself means a pasture among the mountains. Founded in 1070, Bergen still has its narrow lanes, steep inclines, and buildings that show the influence of the ancients. But it also has its newer sections, with wide streets and up-to-the-minute atmosphere.

The railway route between Bergen and Oslo is one of splendor. Long stretches of the road are above timber line, and there are any number of tunnels through what looks like little more than snow and ice.

But the real objective of most of the tourists is the North cape, from which may best be seen the forever new and forever old attraction of the midnight sun. The bleak promontory has become an international stamping ground, in the summer time aglow with a roseate radiance. It is a barren and treeless country, its isolation intensified by the music of the waters as they dash in from the polar sea.

North of the Arctic circle, in Norway, Sweden, and Finland, the sun remains above the horizon day and night from the middle of May to the end of July. Even as far down as southern Norway, central Sweden, and southern Finland there is virtually no darkness at night for a month around midsummer, while Denmark and southern Sweden have only about two hours of darkness.

Words become only a string of adjectives when one tries to picture the marvel and the beauty of the northern summer. The nights are luminous under an opalescent sky. All things stand shadowless and seem themselves to radiate light. Midnight gives off a mystic, silvery sheen. Midday is a profusion of golden sunlight, with everything in nature responding to the stimulus of the intense glare. And all the while the sun is just gliding around and around along the horizon. That is the Norway of today—a land of age-old cities steeped in romanticism, a land of almost unmatched magnificence, a land where the gods dwell with beauty unmarred by civilization.



The Fantoft church near Bergen. It is about 800 years old, and of more or less fantastic construction. Bergen itself abounds in contrasts of the ancient times and the ultra-modern.

Redecorating Walls with a Mere Turn of a Switch

ELECTRICAL engineers have come to the aid of interior decorators in an attempt to give a new kind of beauty to the home. The use of colored lights now makes it possible to alter the scheme of decoration merely by turning a switch.

Nearly everyone has sat in a theater and watched the stage setting change in color as an operator manipulated flood lights. Upon the walls of cabarets the same changes of illumination have been observed. The water gushing from fountains has appeared green or blue or red with every alteration in the light playing upon it. But in all these cases there was no sunlight to complicate the change in color.

With the new system, however, it is planned to make coloring by electric light a 24-hour scheme of decoration. In the Administration building of the Century of Progress exposition at Chicago the idea has been put into practice. Colored lights cast a glow upon the walls and ceilings.

A great variety in the appearance of the room is made possible, the walls taking on many subtle shadings as the switches are manipulated. Many combinations of color are possible. In the Interfraternity club at a Chicago hotel a similar plan has been adopted.

Although the system still is in the process of development, electrical engineers hope to make it a practical substitute for paint and paper in the decoration of private homes. The equipment required is by no means elaborate, and the walls need not be of any special material. As a rule they are a plain white. The lights which impart the color to the walls are directed upward from the floor in some cases. In other instances they are set in vertical rows and their rays are directed along the wall on either side. The lights shine through colored glass and the scheme of decoration may be controlled by a switch.

One of the great merits of this system is the ease with which a room may be "redecorated." If one tires of the color of his wall paper all he has to do is to press a button and he has a room of an entirely different appearance. By varying the color of the glass through which the lights shine a great range of effects is possible. For certain occasions walls of a subdued hue may be desired. Later in the same day a blaze of brilliant color may be desired for some gay festival. These changes may be made at a moment's notice.

The new system is the product of long research by scientists and engineers who have been experimenting for years in an attempt to cope with the numerous problems of illumination and decoration. Their task would have been comparatively simple if they had had merely to design a system which would be effective at night. But the effect of sunlight upon their color scheme always had to be taken into consideration. The perfection of the colored lenses through which the beams shine, the careful shaping and placing of the reflectors which direct the paths of the rays, and considerable improvement in the lights themselves have led to a solution of this complicated problem. The engineers are now directing their attention to a practical application of the system to the private home.

Modernized and Begoggled Pampas Cowboy

THE gaucho of the Argentine pampas is no longer the picturesque character described in books and filmed for the movies. He has taken on the appearance of the man in the accompanying photograph. The dark colored glasses serve to protect his eyes from the glare of the sun. Upon the broad, flat plains of Argentina these men may be seen tending the herds which grow fat on the lush grass. When the cattle have reached the desired weight they are shipped to the stockyards at Buenos Aires to be marketed and butchered. Stock raising is one of the most important occupations in Argentina, and meat packing is one of the staple industries of the city of Buenos Aires.

Proving the Pelican Is No Gentleman

WHEN the keepers at the London zoo begin tossing dead fish about among the water birds of the aviary it is the pelicans who get "the breaks." No other birds are so well equipped to catch fish in the air as are the pelicans, with their great pouches under their lower bills. There is no courtesy, however, among the pelicans. It is "every man for himself" when the fish begin to fly. As a matter of fact, it is a wild scramble, every pelican trying to get every fish. The pelicans, as the accompanying picture shows, are odd looking birds. They are large water fowl with enormous pouches formed by the extensible skin between the lower jaws of their long bills. Because of their ungainly appearance these birds have been the butts of many a joke, even as far back as ancient times. There are more than a half dozen different species of pelican. Birds of the better known species inhabit southeastern Europe, southwestern Asia, and northeastern Africa. Pelicans are also found in North America, Australia, and the Philippine islands. The birds prefer to live along the shallow margins of lakes and rivers. They build their nests of reeds and line them with grass. Their eggs are large and are covered with a chalky white shell. The young birds are of a grayish-brown color, while the adults are white or salmon colored.

By Whitley Nobh

THE drawings above tell the story of coke better, perhaps, than any number of written words. The plant of an iron corporation in an industrial section of Chicago is treated as the subject, and each step in the manufacture of coke, gas, iron, and coke products is shown.

Bituminous coal from the Appalachian field is delivered by steamships to the great iron plant. The coal comes part of its journey by rail, being loaded onto the vessels at ports on Lake Erie. The coal used to make blast furnace and foundry coke comes from Kentucky and Virginia; that used to make domestic coke comes from West Virginia. Speedy unloading equipment transfers a cargo of 10,000 to 12,000 tons of coal to the storage yard in a few hours. Belt conveyors then carry the coal to crushing and mixing equipment, where each grade is pulverized and then transferred to separate bins over the coke ovens.

The coke ovens are built with adjoining walls, a number of the airtight ovens forming what is known as a battery. The modern oven is approximately 40 feet long, 16 inches wide, and 12 feet high, and it takes a charge of 15 tons of coal, which is introduced through charging holes in the top of each oven by a weighing car which runs over the ovens and receives its coal from the storage bins above. Coke is formed in the oven by heating the oven walls with gas for a sufficient period to drive off all of the gaseous matter in the coal, leaving approximately 70 per cent of the original charge as coke.

When the coking process is completed and all of the gas has been driven off, doors at each end of the oven are opened, and a traveling ram pushes the hot coke from the oven into specially designed cars. In the cars the coke is quenched with a water spray. After the coke is pushed out the doors are replaced and sealed and the charging hole covers opened to take the next charge of coal. After the coke is quenched the cars deliver the cooled coke to a wharf from which it is conveyed by belts to a crushing and screening plant, where sizes are prepared which are best for the various consuming markets.

The largest single consumer of coke is the iron blast furnace, where the highest type of solid fuel is necessary in the process of smelting iron ore to produce pig iron. The second largest use of coke is for domestic heating, where it supplies a smokeless and easily controlled fuel. A third important user of coke is the iron foundry, which requires a concentrated fuel for melting the pig iron.

Iron ores used in the blast furnaces of plants on the Great lakes are drawn from the world-famous iron deposits at the head of the lakes. The pig iron produced in the blast furnace is the basic material of the steel and iron industry, which has made possible the marvelous development in manufacture, transportation, and construction.

The gas after leaving the coke ovens is washed and the sulphur and other impurities, which have been driven out of the coal, are removed. The gas is distributed by pipes for industrial heating and domestic use.

The coal tar which drops out of the gas when cooled supplies the base for a great chemical industry which manufactures almost an inconceivable number of products, such as material for surfacing roads and roofs of buildings, disinfectants, including carbolic acid and a number of patented preparations, delicate perfumes, billiard balls, imitation tortoise shell, and a wide variety of medicinal drugs.

The recovered ammonia in peacetime finds its greatest use as a fertilizer, is an important ingredient of cleaning and washing compounds, and is used extensively in the refrigeration industry. In wartime it is the base of the most powerful munitions.

From the crude light oils recovered in the coking process another great family of organic chemicals springs, including motor fuel, commercial solvents, high explosives, paint materials, dyes, flavoring extracts, and synthetic resins of the bakelite type.

FOR THE WASHINGTON POST BOYS AND GIRLS
The Junior Post.
SECTION OF THE WASHINGTON POST
WASHINGTON, D. C., MAY 8, 1932.

NOW IS TIME WHEN ALL SHOULD BECOME GARDENERS

There Are Many Opportunities to Cultivate Useful Growing Things

Dear Post Boys and Girls: Gardening time is here, and everybody should get busy making some kind of a garden if they want to know the real joy of spring. The lucky boys and girls who have a real garden to work in should never grumble about the work, for nothing is as much fun as to dig up old Mother Earth and plant little seeds or tiny plants, and then wait for the tiny green shoots to come out through the ground or the little plants to begin to grow.

Every one can have some kind of a garden, even if it is only a flower box on the porch or window sill or one or two flower pots. One of the dearest old ladies in Washington lives in one furnished room, but all the children come to see the lovely plants she grows on her window sill. A little boy of 8 has planted radishes and parsley in a window box, and is going to be so proud when he can furnish some for the family table.

Washington school children are very fortunate because the thoughtful men and women of Washington have provided school gardens, and we hope that all The Junior Post boys and girls will do their best to make their school gardens the very best in the city.

Of course, The Junior Post boys and girls who live in the country or the suburbs can have a little plot of ground for their own garden—and what fun it is, too!

The Junior Post Editor would like to have some stories and pictures and poems on gardens and gardening. It would be nice if The Post boys and girls who have gardens would write about them and draw pictures of them. We might even have a garden edition of The Junior Post, so get busy, you artists and writers and poets.

While we have gardens in our minds it would be nice to visit the Botanical Gardens and the greenhouses of the Agricultural Department. There are a number of good stories down there and we would be glad to see what our artists can do in the way of pictures. The nice men in charge of the exhibits at the Botanic Garden and at the Agricultural Department are always glad when anyone takes an interest in their work. Then we could have some pictures and stories about the parks and the trees and flowers around Washington, and those of you who have been to Mount Vernon and other historic homes could write about the gardens there.

While you are writing about gardens do not forget the natural gardens and trees around Washington, the fields and woods in which grow acres of daisies and buttercups and wild roses, and later golden rod and the lovely dogwood trees, Virginia creepers, laurel and trailing arbutus found deep down near the earth in the woods. And then, of course, there are our violets and other such wild flowers.

Life.

The world is so full of useless things,
of things that don't count;
Of things that make us petty men, of things of no amount;
Of things of sin, of things of guilt,
of things that try our soul;
Of things of wealth, of things of greed, of things that measure "gold!"
That we haven't time for the useful things, for those things that we can't lend;
For the things of hope, for the things of joy, for the things that make us men.
For the things that make us happy,
for the things that make us free;
For the things that make us human,
like the Maker wants us to be.
But when soul is tied, and life is dull,
and heart is worn with cares;
When morn is gray, and day is dark,
and eyes are filled with tears,
Then it's good to leave the useless noise to sit under the apple tree,
And think and dream of the things we've done, and the men we'd like to be.

Roses.

Have you ever seen a flower
That's as pretty as a rose?
With all its sweet fragrance
It's a joy where'er it grows.

And of all the roses
I like the best, the white.
For when amidst the others
It's such a pretty sight.

It's so delicate in color,
No matter where it grows,
My favorite flower
Will always be the rose!

Snow.

I love to play out in the snow;
I don't care if the wind does blow.
Up and down we go;
Away, away on the snow.
Far and wide,
Far and wide,
Up the hill and down we slide.
Away, away, away we go,
Away, away, across the snow.

My Consolation.

When my heart is heavy and troubled
With worries and unwonted cares,
I go where the brooklet bubbles;
My consolation I seek there.

Among the fragrant flowers I sit at dawn,
Listening to the songs of the birds.
There a new vision of life is born
Which soothes me better than words.

I drink in the joys of nature
Scarce daring to move or speak.
My soul has become more mature,
And I rise, the new day to meet.

I stand there as the morning sun rises,
And a new strength is given me.
I turn and go my homeward way,
And so thankful for the brooklet,
the birds and the trees.

Nobleness.

"As one lamp lights another, nor grows dim, so nobleness enkindles nobleness."

Prof. Tanley had just settled in the lecture room and then the classes filed in. He observed the look on the boys' faces as they passed him and having said their prayer he stood and began his lecture.

We listen in and hear this: "Friends, my lecture today is going to be on nobleness, a matter that the classes of this school show. When a person has done good, keep it up.

"Do not stop because you have been complimented or given a reward. If your parents are given a reward for their work, do you wish them to stop working completely and think themselves high and mighty, or do you want them to keep on in business and build for themselves a name that you would be proud to possess? Nobleness is just a spark that begins in our early life and kindles into a fire in our old age. The speck of fire that a young man has as he opens his first store kindles into a flame as he has other people open his office for him and he comes in any time he pleases. These men have worked hard, and the speck of fire has caught on to the large flame and this man has shown himself a success. Let me send you away, dear friends, with this matter in mind: As one lamp lights another, nor grows dim, so nobleness enkindles nobleness."

As we look in on the class as they file out, we are not surprised to see the understanding look on their faces as they leave with a do or die expression.

The Advent of Spring.

One morning rather early
As I awoke from sleep,
I saw the sun shining brightly,
And heard a bird's tweet, tweet.

I went into my garden,
Where the flowers were in bloom;
Where the balmy air was scented
With the sweetest of perfume.

The buds burst forth in blossoms,
With colors bright and fair;
And cheerful little voices
Rang clearly everywhere.

So then with adoration
I watched these lovely things,
And they all seemed to tell me:
"T'is the advent of the spring."

The Pets' Corner

Edited by Ding-How, of Hydegree.
(Mascot of The Junior Post.)

Bow wow wow wow. Calliope Duckling came to pay us a visit and how that bird did act, although, of course, it is only a baby. We put it in the bath tub and it swam about and said quack! quack! quack! so much that Mr. Tweet Canary began to sing in his golden bungalow in the next room just to let Callie Duckling know that he is the opera singer of the family. Mr. Tweet said Callie could not take a bath in his bathtub, and Callie said it was too small anyway for a real swimmer and there was quite an argument and I really can not tell which one of those birds is the best arguer. Mr. Tweet said tweet, tweet, tweet, and Callie said quack, quack, quack. I had to put on my eyeglasses and write on my typewriter to drown out the sound, bow wow wow.

Anyway we thought that perhaps Callie would not be as happy here as he would around to little Hemmie's house, because Hemmie has such a nice yard and there is only Beauty Bulldog Suydam to play with him. Hemmie is having the best time with Callie, and Beauty is jealous. Hop Toy said he was going to write a story about it all, but an editor can not wait for a reporter to get a story around to the office, so I have had to write it myself. If Hop Toy gets some news about Jerry for next week we will print it. Bow wow wow wow.

I just saw Pat Irish Wolf Hound go by the house with Beverly. Pat is feeling quite proud because he is going to be one of the leaders at the Dog Show this week, but Beverly is going to be there too Pat has a green necktie for the event because you see Pat is an Irishman. Pat says he gets three pounds of meat every day. Well, bow, wow, wow. I guess an editor gets all the meat he can eat and besides an editor likes ice cream too. We have ice cream every Sunday, bow, wow, wow, wow. Aviatrix Wire Haired Terrier Moffett, who lives in the same house with Pat says that the only kind of show she cares about is an air show and then she is very important. Bow, wow, wow, wow. She says she lets Pat eat three pounds of meat if he wants to but as for her she likes candy.

Sandy Orkney Terrier Gordon has been down to my office again and broken my typewriter. He need not think that the Judge will protect him. I will write a story about him and then he will see how important an editor is. Bow, wow, wow. Just because Sandy has a clean white suit all the time he need not think that he is so important. There are other typewriters for him to write on and besides he makes mine spell wrong every time he uses it. Bow, wow, wow, wow, wow.

Daisy and Spider just went by in their big limousine, and had a lot to say when they saw Mike Great Dane out for a walk. Daisy said she was going to get back home before he did and go to sleep on his couch, Bow, wow, wow, wow.

Dear Ding-How: Now that summer is drawing near I feel as if I ought to tell you a story which has a fine moral.

Last summer while I was reclining in a nice shady spot a large black cat (yes, Ding How, perfectly black) came nosing around a juicy bone I had reserved for my supper. I did not want to hurt him and just barked once to frighten him. Imagine my amazement when he raised his back up, like a cat will do, and jumped at me and scratched my face Then he started to run. Now, you know no self-respecting dog would stand for it. Most naturally I started after him. About the time I reached the next corner I was very hot and very, very tired (I am not as young as I used to be). The cat disappeared from sight. After vainless attempts to find him I wandered into a yard where some children were playing. One of the boys yelled, "That dog is mad because he is foaming at the mouth." I looked all around to see the dog when, finally, I learned he meant me. The children in the yard all ran upon a porch while some one phoned the police. Well, sir, I mean to tell you I retreated to my doghouse and I stayed there the rest of the day. I did hear the police siren up the street and I chuckled to myself to think that I was the cause of the excitement.

As I told you, this story has a moral and here it is: Don't chase black cats in the summer, no matter how much they aggravate you.

I'll have to close now, as I suspect Blackie just dug up that bone I buried. I shall have to see about it. Yours very truly,

WUZUM I. REICHMAN.

Dear Ding-How: We are two police puppies that live with our mistress, Jean McCurdy. Our names are Skippy and Micky. We get our mistress to read to us about you in the Junior Post. We think it would be a good idea to start a Ding-How Club. If you do have one we should like to join and here are the names of two dogs who live across the street, Brownie and Fritz. We will close, as we must go to sleep. Sincerely yours,

SKIPPY AND MICKY.

Dear Ding-How: I am a little white Persian kitten. My name is Fluff. I had a little brother which was black, but he died.

I sleep on the bed with my mistress every night. In the morning it is my duty to call her by licking her face, and my, does she jump up quick?

There is also a big dog at my house, which belongs to my mistress' brother, and do I love to fight him! Come visit me sometimes and I will let you play with him. Well, Ding-How, I have to close now, but hope to see it in print. So long, FLUFF.

My mistress is Lemuella Palmer (age 15), 3403 Enslow avenue, Richmond, Va

Thomas Jefferson.

Thomas Jefferson was born at Shadwell, Va. He graduated from William and Mary College and studied law. He took part in the calling of the Continental Congress, where he drew up the Declaration of Independence. During the war he was governor of Virginia, and in 1784 was sent as Minister to France. Returning, he was appointed by Washington Secretary of State. When Washington retired, after eight years as President, Jefferson became Vice President in 1797, under John Adams.

The most important act of his administration was purchase of Louisiana from France. He died July 4, 1826, while the Nation was celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, which he had written.

Signs of Spring.

The twittering of the birds, the dots of green grass here and there and flowers putting on their green dresses and hats of various shades all confirm the approach of spring.

The robins are happily making their nests in the trees' green hair. Small crocuses are poking up their small heads, looking at the world of sunshine. They, too, seem happy at the thought of being let loose from their prison under the icy snows of winter again to enjoy spring's mild air. Mother Nature in spring puts on her brightest hues, making up for the dreary winter months.

THE JUNIOR POST AIRSHIP

"I hope we get that Army and Navy football game here for the Bicentennial celebration. I certainly like to see the midshipmen and the cadets play football, although we have not been able to see it for some years now," said the editor as the pilot tuned up the airship for the weekly pilgrimage of the world.

"So do I," said the pilot. "I have an engagement to take my young nephew and a couple of his friends if they come. My sister's children are all going with me to see the Bicentennial pageant of the inauguration of George Washington and inaugural reception and ball which will be staged on the East Plaza of the Capitol next Saturday evening under the auspices of the Bicentennial Commission. Although, of course, all the original ceremonies really took place in New York."

"The parks look lovely," said the editor, as they circled over Washington. "Washington is certainly beautiful at this time of year."

"Indeed it does, and the outlying countryside is beautiful, too, with the new green and the dogwood blossoms all along the road. I thought we might take a flight over Ash Lawn, the home of James Monroe, near Charlottesville, Va., and see the statue of Monroe, recently unveiled during the governors' convention in Richmond. The governors of many States motored out to the ceremony."

Then they flew over Virginia and Maryland and Pennsylvania and Delaware until they came to Princeton, N. J., where Princeton University is located. They saw Dr. John Grier Hibben, who has been president of the university for twenty years and in whose honor the alumni of the university will return on May 14 to celebrate Hibben day and the retirement of the educator. Dr. Hibben will retire formally in June.

The editor and the pilot turned their airship toward Wooster, Ohio. Another event of importance on May 14 will take place there when Mrs. Herbert Hoover will be the recipient of her seventh honorary award.

"Of course, Mrs. Hoover is a person who takes an interest in public and educational affairs. It is no wonder that the universities and colleges of the country are anxious to honor her," said the editor.

Then across the ocean they flew, just in time to see the American Ambassador in London, Andrew Mellon, being toasted as guest of honor at a dinner given by the Pilgrims of London. Right next to our ambassador the Prince of Wales sat and on the other side was the Earl of Derby.

"He has done many good deeds every day and every year," said the pilot as they looked down on Lord Baden Powell surrounded by the English Scouts, Dover Scouts and Wolf Cubs at Twickenham, Middlesex, England. "A fine looking old gentleman he is, and what a good time he is having."

Over the English Channel they flew to get a glimpse of what was going on on the continent. At Geneva they saw our Secretary of State and Mrs. Henry L. Stimson and our Minister to Switzerland, Hugh Gibson, being entertained at luncheon during the arms conference now going on there.

In Paris they saw a former Secretary of State, Frank B. Kellogg, kneeling at the grave of Aristide Briand, the late French statesman and coauthor with Mr. Kellogg of the Briand-Kellogg peace pact.

The brother of the king, young Prince Nicholas of Roumania, who is a real aviator, flew by the airship as they turned their craft toward home.

Pages Completing Course Urged to Obtain Emblems

In response to the notice printed last Sunday that esquire buttons were now available for pages in the Knighthood of Youth who had completed the first course in knighthood, a number of boys and girls called on The Junior Post editor to get their new buttons.

More esquire buttons are available, and any boy or girl who has completed the four weeks' page course and filled out his or her reminder card faithfully for that period of time can have the buttons without charge.

The Junior Post is anxious to enroll more boys and girls in the Knighthood of Youth. The attention of parents is called to this chance to enlist their children in this Nationwide club for boys and girls sponsored by the National Child Welfare Association of New York, of which President Hoover is honorary chairman.

Good habits are built up in children through membership in the Knighthood of Youth. Day by day the children are reminded that character building is one of the most important things in their lives, and that this character is built through daily good habits.

The habits stressed by the Knighthood of Youth plan include habits which lead to good health as well as to good character.

Start your boy and girl off in good habits through the Knighthood of Youth, parents who read The Washington Post.

THE STORY BOOK LADY

"The Story Book Lady telephoned our house for all of us to be here early because she had something very special for the tour of Story Book Land today," said Stella, as she and Adella hurried along with Matilda and Suzette to meet the Story Book Lady and the members of the Junior Post Writers Club and the Knighthood of Youth for the weekly pilgrimage through Story Book Land.

"I know, she telephoned mother, too," said Suzette. "Oh, dear Story Book Lady, we are all so curious to know what is the surprise," Suzette finished suddenly, as they were joined by the Story Book Lady.

"Wait and see," said the Story Book Lady with a laugh. "It is a real surprise and lots of fun."

"Indeed it will be," said Mr. Gnome, who keeps the gate of the Fairy Tale Bridge that leads to Story Book Land, as he took off his green hat with its scarlet feather and made a deep bow, and his three grandsons, Blick, Flick and Little Mick, took off their green hats with scarlet feathers and made deep bows, also.

"Mr. Gnome and his grandsons are going with us today," said the Story Book Lady. "I thought they would like to meet some old friends."

"It will be lots more fun to have them with us," said Little Lillian.

"Why," said Margaret, "the Story Book Fairy and the Story Book Fairy Children, Merry and Jolly, are all riding on animals out of 'Alice in Wonderland,' the Story Book Fairy is on the White Rabbit and Merry is on the Dormouse. And, oh, look, Jolly is coming right along through the air on the Caterpillar."

"Of course we are," said the Story Book Fairy, "for this is Alice in Wonderland week with the Alice of 'Alice in Wonderland' coming right over to this country, even if she is 80 now, to help us all celebrate the one-hundredth birthday of Lewis Carroll. The Queen says to give her best regards to the Duchess and all her other friends when we find them in Alice in Wonderland."

"Oh, this is going to be so much fun," said Little Lillian. "Oh, look, the White Rabbit is going right down in the Rabbit hole just like it did in 'Alice in Wonderland,' and, just see, the Story Book Fairy is going right after it."

"So are all of us," said the Story Book Lady. "I have made arrangements." Sure enough, down the Rabbit hole all the members of The Junior Post Writers Club and the Knighthood of Youth followed the Story Book Lady and the Story Book Fairies, Merry and Jolly, and Mr. Gnome and his three grandsons, Blick, Flick and Little Mick, down the Rabbit hole.

"I just think it is the most wonderful thing to have a chance to go down Alice in Wonderland street," said Anne. "Mother loves to read the book to us and likes it herself, and is always quoting from it. I want to see the real Alice when she comes to Washington and have her tell us some nice stories about her two sisters and her own childhood and the great time they had listening to the stories told them by their friend, Lewis Carroll, many years ago, which he put in a book which has 'lived' all this time, since an 80-year-old lady was a little girl."

"All the publishers have issued the most wonderful copies of 'Alice in Wonderland,'" said the Story Book Lady, "for this one-hundredth anniversary of the birth of Lewis Carroll, and our artists have had such a good time illustrating them.

But they were all falling, fallin down, and tasting the orange marmalade on the shelf as they fell, ju like in "Alice in Wonderland." The they saw the White Rabbit hurryin along to keep his date and saying h would be late.

They had a wonderful time, lookin into the garden through the little doo which Alice was too large to ge through, and saw her taking a drin out of the bottle marked "Drink Me, and getting smaller, and then large and smaller again, and having to swin in her own tears, shed when she wa large.

"I like the new books," said Alic of The Junior Post Writers Club, "bu I guess it is nice to read the old one too. I am going right home and rea 'Alice in Wonderland' all over again.

"So am I," shouted all the othe children in a chorus.

Editor Stresses Value of Knights' Speaking Softly

Do you speak softly or do yo shout?

That is a very important thing, because if you speak loudly you anno other people and those to whom yo are talking do not care to listen t you.

On a poster which hangs in th office of The Junior Post editor ar these words:

"No one's voice is softer, sweeter
Than the song of our dear Peter.
Bunker, Ted and all the toys
Yell and scream and make a noise
Till I say, 'Let's copy Pete
And make our voices soft an sweet.'"

The ones who speak softly in thi world get along much better. You will notice in the home as well as i the schoolroom and on the playground that the boys and girls wh talk loudly and shout are not as popular as those who speak in a clear low-pitched voice.

Remember this, boys and girls o The Junior Post. It is a good lesso to learn early in life. Later on, i you do not learn it in childhood, i will be too late, and you will g through life handicapped in this way

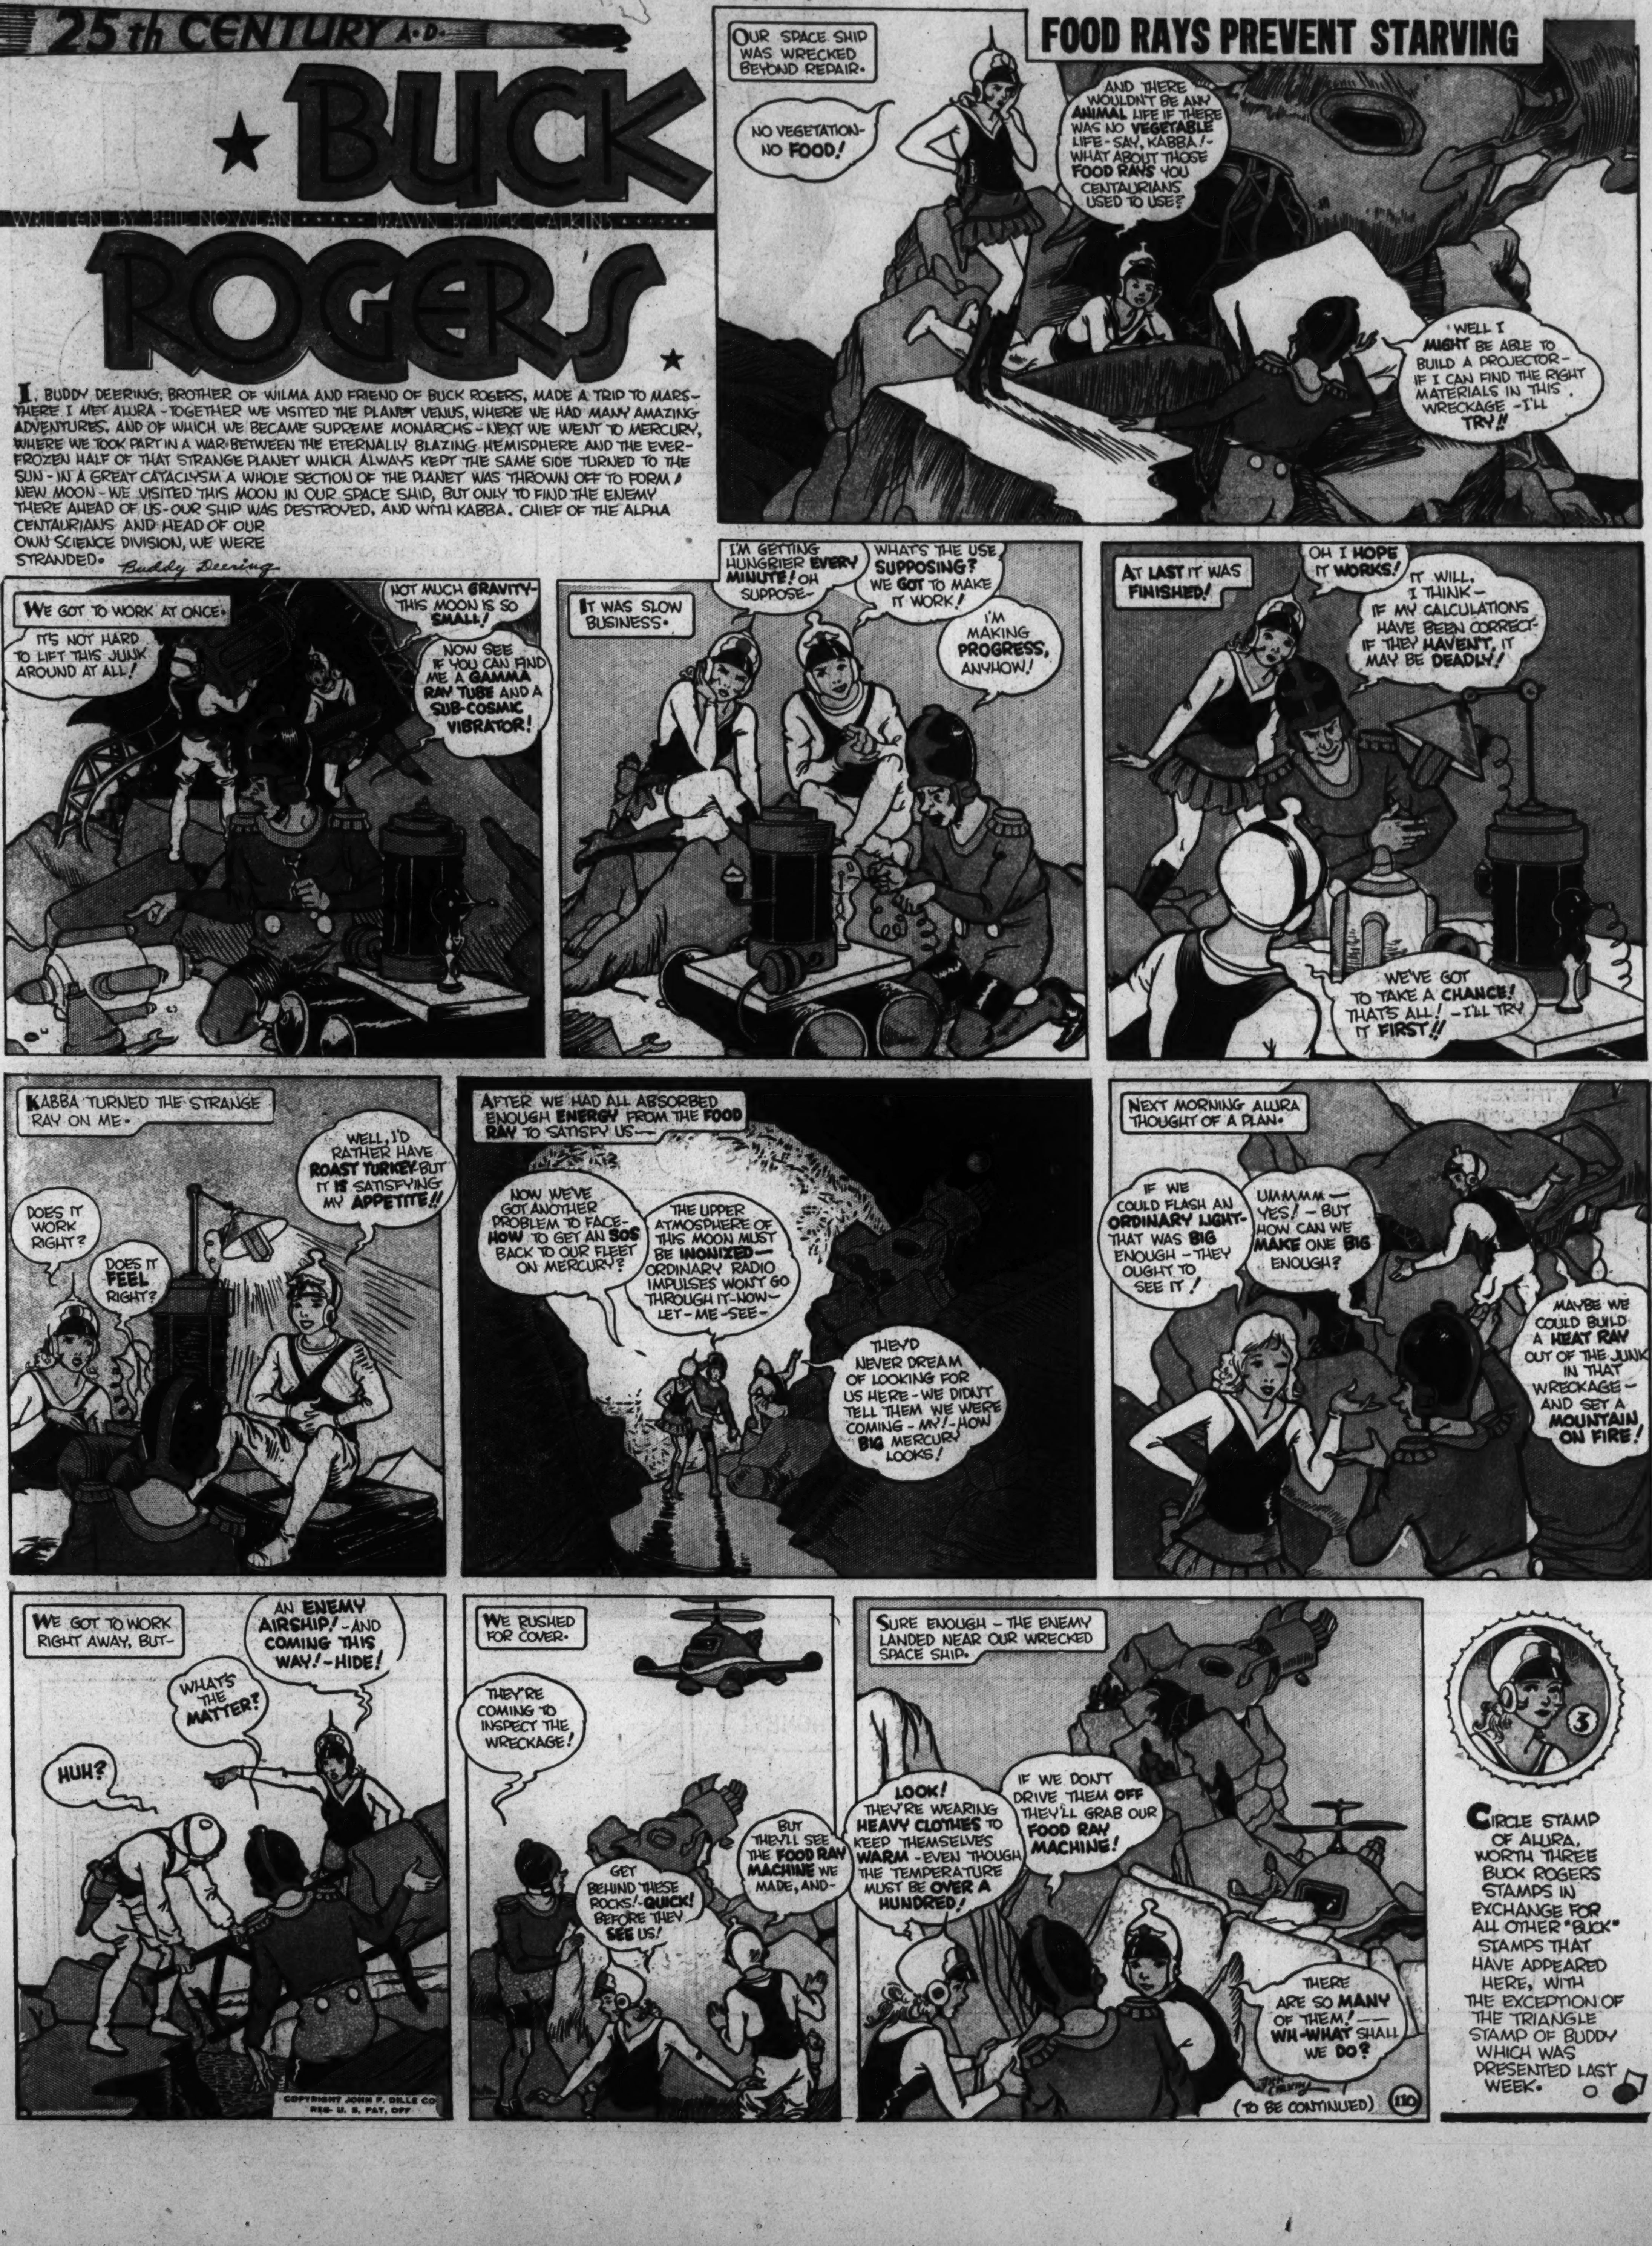
★ BUCK ROGERS ★

WRITTEN BY PHIL NOWLAN ---- DRAWN BY DICK CALKINS

I, BUDDY DEERING, BROTHER OF WILMA AND FRIEND OF BUCK ROGERS, MADE A TRIP TO MARS—THERE I MET ALURA - TOGETHER WE VISITED THE PLANET VENUS, WHERE WE HAD MANY AMAZING ADVENTURES, AND OF WHICH WE BECAME SUPREME MONARCHS - NEXT WE WENT TO MERCURY, WHERE WE TOOK PART IN A WAR BETWEEN THE ETERNALLY BLAZING HEMISPHERE AND THE EVER-FROZEN HALF OF THAT STRANGE PLANET WHICH ALWAYS KEPT THE SAME SIDE TURNED TO THE SUN - IN A GREAT CATACLYSM A WHOLE SECTION OF THE PLANET WAS THROWN OFF TO FORM A NEW MOON - WE VISITED THIS MOON IN OUR SPACE SHIP, BUT ONLY TO FIND THE ENEMY THERE AHEAD OF US - OUR SHIP WAS DESTROYED, AND WITH KABBA, CHIEF OF THE ALPHA CENTAURIANS AND HEAD OF OUR OWN SCIENCE DIVISION, WE WERE STRANDED.

Buddy Deering

FOOD RAYS PREVENT STARVING



OUR SPACE SHIP WAS WRECKED BEYOND REPAIR.
NO VEGETATION - NO FOOD!
AND THERE WOULDN'T BE ANY ANIMAL LIFE IF THERE WAS NO VEGETABLE LIFE - SAY, KABBA! - WHAT ABOUT THOSE FOOD RAYS YOU CENTAURIANS USED TO USE?
WELL I MIGHT BE ABLE TO BUILD A PROJECTOR - IF I CAN FIND THE RIGHT MATERIALS IN THIS WRECKAGE - I'LL TRY!!
WE GOT TO WORK AT ONCE.
IT'S NOT HARD TO LIFT THIS JUNK AROUND AT ALL!
NOT MUCH GRAVITY - THIS MOON IS SO SMALL!
NOW SEE IF YOU CAN FIND ME A GAMMA RAY TUBE AND A SUB-COSMIC VIBRATOR!
IT WAS SLOW BUSINESS.
I'M GETTING HUNGRIER EVERY MINUTE! OH SUPPOSE-
WHAT'S THE USE SUPPOSING? WE GOT TO MAKE IT WORK!
I'M MAKING PROGRESS, ANYHOW!
AT LAST IT WAS FINISHED!
OH I HOPE IT WORKS!
IT WILL, I THINK - IF MY CALCULATIONS HAVE BEEN CORRECT - IF THEY HAVEN'T, IT MAY BE DEADLY!
WE'VE GOT TO TAKE A CHANCE! THAT'S ALL! - I'LL TRY IT FIRST!!
KABBA TURNED THE STRANGE RAY ON ME.
DOES IT WORK RIGHT?
DOES IT FEEL RIGHT?
WELL, I'D RATHER HAVE ROAST TURKEY - BUT IT IS SATISFYING MY APPETITE!!
AFTER WE HAD ALL ABSORBED ENOUGH ENERGY FROM THE FOOD RAY TO SATISFY US—
NOW WE'VE GOT ANOTHER PROBLEM TO FACE - HOW TO GET AN SOS BACK TO OUR FLEET ON MERCURY?
THE UPPER ATMOSPHERE OF THIS MOON MUST BE INONIZED— ORDINARY RADIO IMPULSES WON'T GO THROUGH IT - NOW - LET - ME - SEE -
THEY'D NEVER DREAM OF LOOKING FOR US HERE - WE DIDN'T TELL THEM WE WERE COMING - MY! - HOW BIG MERCURY LOOKS!
NEXT MORNING ALURA THOUGHT OF A PLAN.
IF WE COULD FLASH AN ORDINARY LIGHT - THAT WAS BIG ENOUGH - THEY OUGHT TO SEE IT!
UMMMM — YES! - BUT HOW CAN WE MAKE ONE BIG ENOUGH?
MAYBE WE COULD BUILD A HEAT RAY OUT OF THE JUNK IN THAT WRECKAGE - AND SET A MOUNTAIN ON FIRE!
WE GOT TO WORK RIGHT AWAY, BUT-
AN ENEMY AIRSHIP! - AND COMING THIS WAY! - HIDE!
WHAT'S THE MATTER?
HUH?
COPYRIGHT JOHN F. DILLE CO. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.
WE RUSHED FOR COVER.
THEY'RE COMING TO INSPECT THE WRECKAGE!
GET BEHIND THESE ROCKS! - QUICK! BEFORE THEY SEE US!
BUT THEY'LL SEE THE FOOD RAY MACHINE WE MADE, AND-SURE ENOUGH - THE ENEMY LANDED NEAR OUR WRECKED SPACE SHIP.
LOOK! THEY'RE WEARING HEAVY CLOTHES TO KEEP THEMSELVES WARM - EVEN THOUGH THE TEMPERATURE MUST BE OVER A HUNDRED!
IF WE DON'T DRIVE THEM OFF THEY'LL GRAB OUR FOOD RAY MACHINE!
THERE ARE SO MANY OF THEM! —— WH-WHAT SHALL WE DO?

WALT, WHILE YOU AREN'T DOING ANYTHING WHY DON'T YOU MAKE THAT SHOE SHELF YOU PROMISED ME?
UNCLE WALT, WHAT SIZE DO YOU MAKE THE HOLE IN A BLUEBIRD'S HOUSE?
THE SIZE OF A QUARTER. THAT WILL KEEP THE BLUEJAYS AND WOODPECKERS OUT.
BUT YOU'LL HAVE TO RENT IT IN A HURRY OR THE SPARROWS WILL MOVE IN. AND THEY'RE TROUBLESOME TENANTS.
I'LL PUT A SIGN ON IT— FOR RENT TO BLUEBIRDS ONLY.
I'LL BE ALL RIGHT, SKEEZIX RUN IN AND GET ME ONE OF THOSE LONGER NAILS.
YOU HANG ON THEN.
GEE, UNCLE WALT, YOU DIDN'T NEED TO COME DOWN. I'D HAVE BROUGHT IT UP TO YOU.
NOW THERE'S A SWELL JOB IF WE DO SAY IT OURSELVES.
TURN IT THIS WAY. THEY LIKE A SOUTHERN EXPOSURE.
DID YOU GET IT DONE, WALT?

THE LONE SAILOR - ○ ○ ○
HARRY PIDGEON, of Los Angeles, at the age of 50 - ACQUIRED A KNOWLEDGE OF NAVIGATION FROM BOOKS, CONSTRUCTED A 34-FOOT YAWL WITH HIS OWN HANDS, AND SAILED AROUND THE WORLD ALONE
5-8-32

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate

The trail for lone sailors was blazed 37 years ago by Captain Joshua Slocum, a native of Nova Scotia. He had been a skipper of seagoing vessels, and with a lifetime of sea experience, set sail from Boston in a 37-foot boat named the Spray. Slocum rebuilt the Spray himself, piece by piece, from a sloop nearly one hundred years old. He sailed a distance of 46,000 miles before again reaching his home port, and at one time was out of sight of land for 70 days. After his feat of circling the globe, he sailed away again within a few days of his return, and has never been heard of since.

A far more daring exploit was that of Harry Pidgeon, for, unlike Slocum, Pidgeon had little or no knowledge of navigation when he decided, at the age of fifty, to build a boat and sail to the South Seas. It required 18 months to build the Islander, the name which he gave the 34-foot yawl-rigged craft. In its construction he had little or no help, and the cost of material amounted to only $1,000. In the meantime, having acquired a knowledge of navigation from reading every book on the subject that he could find, Pidgeon sailed forth in search of adventure. With no thought of going around the world, he sailed from Los Angeles in November, 1921, for the Marquesas Islands, some three thousand miles to the southwest. Reaching his destination in seven weeks, he continued to sail here and there, sometimes spending days and weeks at sea, then days and weeks on shore in some out of the way port among strange but friendly people. Although intrigued with the lure of the seven seas, he was half way around the world before he decided to circumnavigate it. Many mishaps befell him, and he had far more than his share of harrowing experiences, but he managed to pull through in each instance, and three years, eleven months and thirteen days after leaving Los Angeles he dropped anchor in his home port, having completely circled the globe . . in a sailboat . . . without even a dog for company.
